HYGIÈNE de la TOILETTE

La vogue dont jouit le Coaltar Saponiné Le Beuf pour les usages de la toilette journalière (pour le bon entretien des gencives et des dents, les lotions du cuir chevelu, lavage des nourrissons, soins intimes, etc., etc.) est due à ses qualités antiseptiques, microbicides, détersives et toniques, que tout produit destiné à ces usages, doit posséder. Le Coaltar Le Beuf offre ces qualités à un si haut degré qu'elles lui ont valu d'être admis dans les hôpitaux de Paris. Cet excellent produit possède, en outre, l'avantage, très rare chez un véritable antiseptique, de n'être ni irritant, ni toxique; il peut, en conséquence, être laissé entre les mains des plus inexpérimentés.

THE JOANNE GUIDE BOOKS

The English editions of the Joanne Guide Books are every year gaining more and more popularity among English-speaking tourists on the Continent. They are something more than a mere translation of the French guides, for, wherever necessary, information either useful or interesting to English and American tourists has been added.

The Joanne Guide Books are handy in size, thoroughly practical, and complete.

The information about hotels, restaurants, etc., is of the most reliable nature, as no matter which has been paid for is ever allowed to appear in the text.

COMMUNICATIONS WITH PARIS

Versailles is reached from Paris : — by rail (Saint-Lazare, Montparnasse or Invalides station) ; by tram, from the quai du Louvre (at the back of the Louvre, next the river); or by road.

1. By rail : — A. From Paris-Saint-Lazare to Versailles Rive Droite (Right Bank) : 23 k. (14 1/6 miles) in 55 mins. by ordinary train and 35 mins. by through train : 1 fr. 50 and 1 fr. 15; no reduction on return ticket; 1 to 2 trains per hour. Stations on the Paris-Ceinture (Circle) railway issue through tickets to Versailles Rive-Droite, changing at Saint-Lazare. A few trains go to Versailles-Chantiers (1 fr. 80 and 1 fr. 20) a station on the main line to Brittany.

B. — From Paris-Montparnasse to Versailles Rive Gauche (Left Bank) : 18 k. (11 miles) in about 30 to 35 mins. : 1 fr. 35 and 90 c.; no reduction on return ticket; 1 to 2 trains per hour. Stations on the Paris Ceinture (Circle) railway issue through tickets to Versailles Rive-Gauche, changing at Ouest-Ceinture. A few trains go to Versailles-Chantiers (1 fr. 90 and 1 fr. 30) a station on the main line to Brittany.

C. — From Paris-Invalides to Versailles Rive Gauche (electric traction) : 18 k. (11 miles) in about 25 to 35 mins. : 1 fr. 35 and 90 c.; no reduction on return ticket; 1 to 2 trains per hour.

2. By tram : — From Paris-Louvre to Versailles Place-d'Armes (Palace); mechanical traction inside Paris, electric beyond : 19 k. (11 3/4 miles) in 1 h. 1/4; 95 c. and 65 c. A car leaves the quai du Louvre (between the Pont-Neuf and the Pont-des-Arts) every 12 to 20 mins. It follows the right bank of the Seine (stopping places : Place du Carrousel, Pont-Royal, Pont-de-Solferino, Place de la Concorde, Pont-Alexandre III, Pont-des-Invalides, Place de l'Alma, Quai de Billy, Pont-d'Iéna, Quai de Passy, Passerelle-de-Passy, Pont-de-Grenelle, Pont-Mirabeau), whence the line branches off to the Avenue de Versailles (stopping places : 123, Avenue de Versailles, Point-du-Jour [Seine steamboats and Ceinture railway station]) leaving Paris by the Porte de Saint-Cloud. The car then follows the Route de Versailles, via Boulogne, Sevres (at the Pont de Sevres, pontoon-station of the Seine steamboats, Paris-Suresnes service), Chaville and Viroflay.

3. By road : — A. The shortest route from Paris to Versailles by road is that taken by the trams, as above, leaving Paris by the Porte de Saint-Cloud, beyond the Ceinture railway station of the Point-du-Jour : 11 k. 1/2 (7 miles) from the Porte de Saint-Cloud to Versailles Place-d'Armes (Palace), by the Pont de Sevres (Sevres bridge), Sevres, Chaville, Viroflay and the Avenue de Paris (note in this avenue nos. 59-61, 53, 41 bis and 3; See p. 110). This route is in parts paved with large stones (pavé), but is almost flat, except for an incline at Sevres.

B. — Two other itineraries, each more pleasant (without pavé) and more picturesque, may be followed, but both are very hilly : 1. From the Porte de Saint-Cloud (See above) to the r. along the Route de Saint-Cloud, Pont de Saint-Cloud (bridge), then a long and steep rise to Saint-Cloud and Montretout (birfurcation, to the l. to the Rond Point de Montretout), Parc de Saint-Cloud, Ville d'Avray, Grille de Picardie (octroi of Versailles), then a descent, Avenue de Saint-Cloud and Versailles Place-d'Armes (Palace) : 12 k. 1/2 (7 $^{1}/_{5}$ miles) from the Porte de Saint-Cloud. — N. B. The Pont de Saint-Cloud can also be reached by way of the Bois de Boulogne (Porte Dauphine or Porte de Passy), the lakes and Boulogne. — 2. From the Place de l'Etoile, Paris, take the Avenue de la Grande-Armée, passing out of the city at the Porte de Neuilly, then through the Bois de Boulogne to the Pont de Suresnes. A long ascent to Mont Valerien and Montretout, then the Bois de Saint-Cloud, Ville-d'Avray, Grille de Picardie (octroi of Versailles), and a descent, by the Avenue de Saint-Cloud to Versailles Place-d'Armes (Palace) : 14 k. 1/2 (10 miles) from the Porte de Neuilly.

For itinerary in Versailles, See p. 13, for arrival by train, tram or road.

Cook's Excursions. — During the fine season (May to October) excursion parties leave Cook's Tourist Agency (1, Place de l'Opéra) for Versailles, every day except Mondays : 1. In special, large automobile touring cars (departure 10.15 a.m.; return about 6 p.m.); travelling via the Bois de Boulogne, Suresnes, Saint-Cloud, Ville-d'Avray, Versailles (visit to the Palace and Park : lunch): returning by the Trianon, Malmaison (Chateau) and Rueil. Fare : 12 fr. 50 per pers.; lunch not included. 2. In ordinary automobiles (more rapid service; departure 11 a.m.; return about 6 p.m.); same route as above as far as Versailles; return by Trianon, Saint-Germain (Chateau), Malmaison and Rueil. Fare 17 fr. 50 per pers.; lunch not included. For these excursions seats must be booked in advance.

General aspect.

VERSAILLES, town of 54,982 inhabitants, residence of the Court of France until the Revolution, and chief city of the Seine-et-Oise département or county, seat of a bishopric and with important garrison, has preserved its ancient and magnificent aspect of a royal town in spite of the rapid tide of modern life. Sprung up around the Palace of Louis XIV, towards which its vast and stately avenues of secular elms converge, it developed progressively in the reign of the Great Monarch and under his successors. Its streets are straight, clean and white, with occasional gardens and numerous fine dwellings of the distant past. Although it has undergone many transformations during the last twenty years, Versailles itself, in the midst of the busy movement which animates it, remains calm and reposeful.

The Palace, colossal and unique in France, may be likened to the synthesis of the art of Louis XIV. Adding to its beauty are the Park, the masterpiece of Le Nôtre, and its graceful dependencies, the Grand and the Petit Trianons, erected by Louis XV, but so full of memories of Marie-Antoinette, the unfortunate wife of Louis XVI.

Situated on a plateau and surrounded by a line of woods and forests, the town enjoys a particularly healthy climate. The air is bracing, even during the hottest days of summer,

How to Visit.

A minimum of two days is necessary to visit Versailles in detail and follow at leisure the successive itineraries given of the Palace, the Park, the Trianons and the Town.

If only one day can be spared for the visit, it is preferable to arrive in the morning before lunch, going at once to the Place d'Armes and the Palace; then following itineraries I and II (p. 21 and p. 51). These itineraries may conveniently be separated by the lunch hour. Then should be visited the Park (p. 67), the Grand Trianon (p. 87) and the Petit Trianon (p. 97).

Important : — Do not visit on Monday, when a considerable part of the Palace is closed, and avoid Sunday, when there is a great number of visitors; unless, of course, it is desired to see the admirable spectacle of the fountains playing (Grandes Eaux : for description, See p. 85; days and hours of display, p. 10).

General Directions.

One arrives at Versailles by rail, tram or by road from Paris, and the Palace is reached according to the point of arrival as under :

From the railway station : — A. Gare Saint-Lazare to Versailles (Rive Droite) : On arrival at Versailles, passengers leave the station by the r. Duplessis. The electric tram cars, grey disc, go to the Palace : 15 c.; those carrying a pink disc, to the Trianons. The same journey by cab : 1 fr. 25 (1 fr. 50, 2 horse), by taxi auto (See tariff p. 9). — On foot, follow to the left the rue Duplessis, crossing the Boulevard de la Reine (p. 112; at the corner, Post Office Savings Bank) and past the Place du Marché and the rue de la Paroisse (p. 111) as far as the Avenue de Saint-Cloud. This, to the right, leads to the Palace (15 minutes' walk in all). If it is desired to visit the Trianons first, follow the rue Duplessis, as above, for about 100 yards, as far as the Boulevard de la Reine, which leads (turn to the right) direct to the Grand and Petit Trianons (about ½ hour : See plan).

B. — Gare Montparnasse or Invalides to Versailles (Rive Gauche) : on arrival at Versailles, passengers leave the station by the Avenue Thiers, and, either by the Avenue de Paris (to the right) or the Avenue de Sceaux (to the left), reach the Palace in about 5 minutes.

C. — The Gare des Chantiers is the farthest from the centre of the town. From this station take the electric tram cars, green disc (get down at the Avenue de Paris for the Palace; for the Trianons, however, change at the Place du Marché into a car bearing a pink disc). On foot, follow the rue des Chantiers and the Avenue de Paris.

By tram or road from Paris : — The tramway and the two roads from Paris (Avenue de Paris and Avenue de Saint-Cloud) terminate at the Place d'Armes, in front of the Palace.

History of the Town and Palace.

Origin. Versailles under Louis XIII. — Three centuries ago Versailles was but a humble village, with an old feudal castle built on a slight eminence, surrounded by meadows, forests, lakes and marsh. On August 24th, 1607, the young Dauphin, Louis XIII, then six years of age, came to Versailles from Saint Germain in his coach to attend his first hunt.

In 1624, then king, Louis XIII, whose favourite sport was the chase, bought some ground on the summit of the hill, and had a hunting lodge built, where he could sleep whenever he came to hunt the fox and deer in these parts. The lodge was of the simplest character, built of stone and brick, without ornament, in the somewhat cold style of the houses of the Place des Vosges, Paris. On the side facing the open country (that is, where is now the park, but then a valley of thickets and small streams) were eight windows on the ground floor, with a central door; on the first floor, nine windows; and on the second, small windows just beneath the eaves. On the entrance side, two wings at right angles to the main building encompassed a small court yard closed by a portico of arcades.

Louis XIII soon grew fond of this quiet retreat, in keeping with his somewhat melancholy nature, and broke the monotony of royal splendour and convention by more and more frequent stays, often in the company of friends. On the 10th November, 1630, he here had a secret meeting with Richelieu, at that time the object of bitter court intrigue, and, just at the moment when Richelieu's enemies believed their hour of triumph come, the king placed full political powers into the Cardinal's hands and ordered the arrest of his adversaries. This was Versailles' first day of political history, known as the Journée des Dupes (Day of Dupes).

Before his death, Louis XIII had considerably enlarged this domaine, having bought the feudal castle and had it razed. He had gardens quincunxes and stone-flagged pathways, laid out. But the building itself was unchanged. Nothing remains of it to-day save some flanking walls level with the soil, vestiges of foundations and (perhaps) the spiral staircase built into one of the walls. But it is from this small « house of cards », as Saint-Simon was pleased to call it, transformed and reconstructed by Louis XIV around its small rectangular court yard, which later became the Cour de Marbre (Marble Court), and on the same foundations, that the Palace of Versailles grew and developed to its present magnificent dimensions.

The first Versailles of Louis XIV. — It was also on a hunting expedition that Louis XIV, at the age of 13, first came to Versailles, on April 18th, 1651. In 1660, four months after his marriage, he brought his wife here, Marie-Thérèse d'Autriche, daughter of the king of Spain. In 1661, on the death of Mazarin, his chief minister, Louis XIV governed alone and unaided, and it was then that he conceived the idea of converting Versailles into a lasting monument to his power and glory. Versailles attracted him particularly for the execution of his project because of the great open land all around, so the transformation of the small chateau built by Louis XIII was commenced. The architect Louis Le Vau (1613?-1670) was ordered to renovate and embellish with ornament the older building that Louis XIV was loath to destroy. The roof was covered with gilded ornamentation; a wrought iron balcony was placed around the façades; busts of white marble on sculptured brackets relieved the nudity of the walls. This was the first Versailles of Louis XIV, of which the Marble Court (Cour de Marbre) is a relic, and which for a very long time was erroneously attributed to Louis XIII, whose work, as we have seen, had been so completely modified. At the same time, the celebrated landscape gardener Le Nôtre (1613-1700) traced out the scheme of the park, at the price of tremendous labour, laying terraces and hollowing out the ground for the fountains. Sumptuous fêtes, at which Molière acted before his royal master, were given in honour of Mlle de la Vallière, and then Madame de Montespan, in 1664 and 1668.

The second Versailles of Louis XIV. — Soon this new palace was no longer of sufficient size for the increasing renown of Louis XIV. Besides, the taste in architecture had undergone a change, and the Renaissance, styled « Romaine », imported from Italy, had taken the place of the French Renaissance with its brick and stone combination. Le Vau was charged by the king to « envelop » the chateau on the park side with a vast palace of stone, with straight lines and terraced roofs, balusters, flame ornamentations and trophies. This forms the central body of the palace as we see it to-day. Once again Louis XIV (doubtless out of respect for the past and with a desire to link up the work at each stage of its development refused to demolish the existing building and wipe out all traces of his predecessor's work. This explains the apparent anomaly of two styles in the Palace of Versailles, two palaces, so to speak, in juxtaposition — one towards the town on the entrance side, and the other facing the park. Another objection made by Colbert, with deference and respect, to the king's plans concerned the lack of running water, which threatened to foredoom the fountains to a fatal drought. Here again Louis XIV, who began to take pleasure in « forcing nature », disregarded the objection.

This second Versailles of Louis XIV, which includes a part of the interior grands appartements, was terminated (Le Vau having died in 1670) by the architect's pupil and friend François d'Orbay. A grand staircase, called the Escalier des Ambassadeurs (Ambassadors' staircase), destroyed in the reign of Louis XV, led to the apartments. It was ornamented in the same style as the apartments, like the Escalier de Marbre (Marble staircase or the Escalier de la Reine (Queen's staircase) which has remained, with a profusion of coloured marble in mosaic, gilded sculpture and rich painting. The illustrious Le Brun (1619-1690), superintended the entire interior decoration of the palace.

The third Versailles of Louis XIV. — Louis XIV, however, continued, year after, year to extend his power and glory, which reached its zenith with the treaty of Nimègue (1679). He then thought of definitely transferring his Court to Versailles and making it the seat of government. In 1676, Jules, Hardouin Mansart (1645-1708) was named chief architect of the king and took up the work of Le Vau, amplifying and giving to it its definite form. On the side facing the town, he linked up some older buildings, which form, on each side of the Cour d'Honneur (Court of Honour), the wings of the ministries; he raised those of the Cour de Marbre (Marble Court), reconstructed and strenghtened the façade at points where it had weakened, decorating the top with statues, seated or reclining, and gilded leads. On the side facing the park, he corrected and harmonised the main body of the palace and built the two Ailes du Midi (1682) and du Nord (1684) (South and North Wings), which give to this immense façade a total length of 580 metres (634 yards) with 375 windows He also remoddled much of the interior apartments and arranged, with Le Brun's aid, the grande galerie or galerie des Glaces (Gallery of Mirrors). In the park, which Le Nôtre had finished, he built the Orangerie and the double staircase of cyclopean aspect, known as the Cent Marches (Hundred Stairs). He completed his labours by the Chapel, which his brother-in-law Robert de Cotte (1656-4735) terminated. This is the third Versailles of Louis XIV as it stands to-day.

More than thirty thousand workmen were employed at a time on this stupendous task, in building the palace as well as in laying out of grounds, which had in places to be drained. This necessary work of cleansing gave rise to terrible epidemics which ravaged the ranks of the toilers. « The mortality is prodigious », wrote Mme de Sévigné on October 12th, 1768, and every night carts full of dead are removed. » At the same time, the regiment of Swiss Guards was employed to dig out the lake known as the Pièce d'Eau des Suisses (Lake of the Swiss). In order to supply the fountains, a simple horse worked pump had been erected to draw water from the large pond of Clagny, which existed where is now the Boulevard de la Reine, necessitating the erection of a water tower. But soon afterwards all the rain water from the higher levels around Versailles had to be drained by a vast system of gutters and pools, which still exist. Then, in 1681 to 1685, De Ville and Rennequin Sualem, natives of Liége, constructed the famous Machine de Marly at Louveciennes and thus brought to Versailles water from the Seine. A gigantic project to alter the course of the river Eure, in which soldiers were employed conjointly with workmen, had to be abandoned (1686) owing to the disasters which over shadowed the end of the great king's reign and to the depleted state of the exchequer. The Aqueduc de Maintenon is a giant relic of this huge failure.

At the time the palace was taking definite shape, Louis XIV had Mansart construct its dependency, the Grand Trianon, in 1687 (See p. 87), the Chateau de Clagny, for Mme de Montespan, 1671 to 1684, and for himself, the Chateau de Marly, commenced in 1679 and still unfinished in 1703, and which began, after Versailles, again to swallow up untold millions of francs. Clagny, which stood practically on the ground now occupied by the Rive Droite station, no longer exists; of Marly there are only a few vestiges level with the soil. Of this magnificent trio Versailles alone remains.

The Comptes des Bâtiments du Roi (Building Accounts of the King's Domaine) show the following figures : 65,651,257 pounds for Versailles and the Trianon; 11,686,969 pounds for Marly; 1,986,299 pounds for Clagny; 4,611,918 for the Machine de Marly; 8,983,627 for work on the river Eure scheme : a grand total of 93 million pounds. Allowing for the relative value of money in those days as compared with our own, we get the approximate total of 372 million francs (£14,880,000). To this estimate must be added all the unpaid labour pressed into service during the building.

These sums doubled and grew immeasurably in the imagination of the masses, millions becoming billions, and, on the eve of the Revolution, the accounts referring to the cost of building Versailles were reported to have been destroyed by Louis XIV, who dared not acknowledge their total. The same exaggeration marked the popular estimate of the number of dead among the workmen employed. Sebastien Mercier spoke, at this epoch, of « rivers of tears » which had flowed there, and Chateaubriand, in René, evokes « the wailing voice of sorrow which issues from these walls, like the reverberating echo of the sighs of the toiling multitude ».

The Town. – At first under Louis XIII and then under Louis XIV, the town developed simultaneously with the palace. Its royal charter of foundation is dated May 22nd, 1671. At this time Louis XIV, then at Dunkerque, in the heart of Flanders, decreed that land should be given to all persons making a request for it, with divers exemptions and one tax only of « 5 sols annually per apent (4 to 5 thousand sq yards) on condition that buildings should be erected thereon, with symmetry, according to the plans and models delivered by the superintendent of Buildings ». Three large avenues, to-day the avenues of Saint-Cloud, Sceaux and Paris, were traced, spreading out fan-like from the Place d'Armes, where Mansart erected the Grandes and Petites Ecuries (Major and Minor Stables) of the royal household. At the death of Louis XIV (September 1st, 1715) the inhabitants numbered 30,000.

The Regent and Louis XV. — The Regent, Philippe II d'Orléans, nephew of the late king, who succeeded Louis XIV in the government of France during the minority of the young Louis XV, abandoned Versailles for seven years in favour of Vincennes and Paris. On returning there he led a scandalous life, and died of apoplexy at the palace on December 2nd, 1723.

Louis XV also never resided at Versailles for any lengthy period, sharing his leisure between this and his other royal abodes. During his reign, however, the palace underwent important transformations. First of all, the old royal apartments, whose pomp and magnificence were scarcely in keeping with the interior comfort which marked the evolution of taste towards the conditions of modern life, were supplemented by a series of private apartments, where the king could be alone in his own family circle unembarrassed by the rules of court etiquette. These are the apartments of Louis XV, overlooking the Cour de Marbre. If in these transformations many noble works of the past were sacrificed, at least the marvellous and elegant decoration of carved and gilded wood, the work of the best artists of the day, has been left to us. The same is not, unfortunately, the case with the exterior modifications.

The triumph of the neo-classic style was becoming more and more pronounced; the Cour de Marbre, in spite of its charm, was condemned, and was indeed only saved from complete devastation by the lack of funds. The architect Gabriel (1710-1783) erected one of the heavy collonnaded pavilions with Greek pediment which we see on entering the gates, smothering the main building with their massive inelegance. Against this, however, it is to Louis XV and the same architect Gabriel that we owe the interior of the Opera house in the palace and the charming Petit Trianon (See p. 97). In connection with Louis XV it will also be remembered that Versailles was the scene of much of that monarch's shameful debauchery. He had private apartments installed here for his mistresses (amongst the most celebrated, Mme de Pompadour and Mme du Barry) as well as in a house in the town known as the Parc aux Cerfs, having been built on an ancient hunting deer preserve.

Louis XVI. — With Louis XVI came a further transformation; the taste for interior home comfort having become still more developed, Marie-Antoinette had a suite of private apartments installed, of the boudoir type, overlooking one of the court yards of the palace, characterised by a delicacy of ornamentation which still excites our admiration. The evolution in style was the same in the gardener's art, and, in contrast with the old imposing and solemn park, Marie-Antoinette had built for her the Hameau paysan (peasant hamlet) of the Petit Trianon (See p. 100).

The Revolution. — We have reached the year 1789 and the great Revolution. It was at Versailles on May 5th, 1789, in a specially built hall since demolished, that the Assembly of the States General, composed of the three orders, the Clergy, Nobless and Third Estate, convened by the minister Calonne, held its first meeting.

It was in the Salle du Jeu de Paume (covered tennis court; p. 108) that the deputies of the Third Estate, under the presidence of Bailly, on the memorable 20th of June, constituted themselves into the National Assembly, swearing the great oath not to separate until they had given a constitution to France. Finally, at the royal sitting in the General Assembly on June 23rd, Mirabeau made his famous proclamation with all the fiery vehemence of which he was master : « We are here by the will of the people, and will leave only by the force of the bayonet. »

Events now succeeded each other rapidly. On July 14th, the famous state prison of Paris, the Bastille, fell, and on October 5th the mob, led by the market Women of Les Halles, marched on Versailles, attacked the palace (October 6th), massacred the body guard and brought back to Paris the king, the queen and their children between two lines of pikes. This was the end of royal Versailles, as it was indeed the end of royalty itself.

During the Revolution the palace suffered relatively little, the attention of all being centred on Paris, but it was entirely stripped. A certain number of works of art, pictures, statues and some furniture were conveyed to the Louvre museum and other national institutions. All the rest were sold by auction, the fantastic sale lasting without interruption for a year (from 10 in the morning on August 25th, 1793, to August 20th, 1794). The palace, at one moment threatened with complete destruction, escaped with great difficulty, owing principally to the protestations of the inhabitants of the town.

Versailles in the 19th Century and up to the present time. — Napoléon I undertook the restoration of the palace to its former beauty, and was about to carry out certain alterations, of a not very elegant character, based on plans proposed by his architect Fontaine, when the first reverses of the Empire rendered them impossible. He resided personally at the Grand Trianon. In 1814, following on the last great disasters and the invasion, the allies appeared at Versailles. Among them were Alexander of Russia, and his two brothers, as well as Frederick William, the king of Prussia and his two sons, one of whom was destined, fifty-six years later, to return to Versailles, there to be proclaimed German Emperor.

Under the Restoration, the architect Dufour built the second pavilion with pediment and colonadnes which envelops the entrance court yard of the palace, as a pendant to the Gabriel wing. Important repairs were carried out in all directions, but the palace became more and more dilapidated. Its upkeep was ruinous for an end which seemed futile, for then it was regarded merely as an immense block of buildings, extremely old fashioned in style, with which no one knew what to do.

This meant destruction, but Louis-Philippe saved it by having it restored at his own expense, establishing within its walls a museum devoted to the national glory of France. Unfortunately the citizen king, who spent on this work about 23 million francs, was not endowed with a highly developed artistic taste, and, in order to accommodate often mediocre canvasses, committed grave depredations. For Versailles, however, this was salvation, but salvation with dishonour. The best part of his work, the only part destined to subsist, was the collection of pictures and retrospective documents which he brought together from all parts, and which are still of the greatest interest.

During the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, the Germans established at Versailles the head quarters of their armies operating against Paris, and in the Galerie des Glaces (Gallery of Mirrors) on the 18th January 1871 king William was crowned with the imperial diadem of Germany. It was in the house at N° 20, rue de Provence, that Bismarck arranged the terms of the armistice and the capitulation of Paris with Jules Favre, signed on January 26th. On the same day, Thiers and Jules Favre signed with him the peace preliminaries. On March 12th, the last German soldier quartered in the town left Versailles by the Picardie gate, and on the evening of the same day the first French soldier re-entered.

Following this, immediately after the close of hostilities with the Germans, came the Commune revolution, with its short reign of terror in Paris. The legal government then occupied Versailles, and operated from here against the revolutionaries in the capital. The National Assembly sat in the Opera-house, transformed for this purpose, and somewhat disfigured in consequence. The Republic was there definitely proclaimed on February 25th, 1875. The government and the two Chambers continued to sit at Versailles; the Senate still occupied the Opera-house; a new hall (p. 63) was built for the deputies in the south wing of the palace (8th March 1876). On the 19th June, 1879, the two Chambers, united in congress, voted their return to Paris. The ancient deputies' Chamber now serves for the congress of parliamentarians which meets to elect the president of the French Republic.

But the palace is to-day undoubtedly the principal interest of Versailles, is indeed its very life and soul. The magnificent art which it represents has regained its well merited position. M. Pierre de Nolhac, its eminent conservateur, with a perfect science in matters of art, repairs as far as possible the devastations of time and man; he is aided in his heavy task by M. A. Pératé, conservateur adjoint; M. Marcel Lambert, architect, looks after the exterior works. Considerable sums of money have been intelligently spent in this great work during the last twenty years; more is still necessary, money which could never be regretted, for Versailles repays its benefactors a hundred-fold in beauty and glory preserved.

Mention must be made of the Société des Amis de Versailles (annual subscription 20 frs.; office in Paris, 107, rue de Rivoli, Pavillon de Marsan, Louvre; delegate at Versailles, Librairie Bernard, 17, rue Hoche) which brings to the aid of the state pecuniary and artistic help of a most useful character. Its members enjoy numerous advantages, and several times a year attend most interesting lectures.

THE PALACE

The main body of the Palace is open every day except Monday from April 1st to September 30th, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.; from October 1st to March 31st, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Monday the visits are restricted to small parties conducted by a guardian of the Palace. — Salles des Croisades (Gallery of the Crusades), open on Thursday and Sunday, same hours as above. — Salles de la République et de l'Empire (galleries of the Republic and the Empire, (ground floor, South Wing), Wednesday and Saturday. — Attique du Nord (upper Northern gallery) collection of portraits, every day.

For the itineraries from the station etc. to the Palace, See p. 13.

Guides, unconnected in any way officially with the building (useless if the directions given in this guide book are carefully followed, station themselves in the precincts of the Palace (if employed, terms should be arranged before hand on a basis of 1 fr. per hour).

N. B. — The numbers are those of the rooms, and refer to the plan.

ITINERARY I. — This itinerary, which embraces the visit to the CHAPEL, the ROYAL APARTMENTS, and the most interesting part of the Palace, is that which should be followed first of all. It gives an opportunity of seeing ALL THAT IT IS INDISPENSABLE TO HAVE SEEN, and can be followed on any day.

By whatever means the Palace is reached, the visitor arrives first of all at the place d'Armes, from which point radiate the three grand avenues of Saint-Cloud, Paris (the centre one) and Sceaux. On the town side, the Place is semi-circular in shape, bordered by the Grandes and Petites Ecuries

(Major and Minor Stables) of the king, constructed by Mansart and to-day used as barracks for artillery and engineers (On the central entrances, fine equestrian groups on the pediments). Opposite these barracks is the main entrance and the vast buildings of the Palace. — If the arrival is by tram from the Rive Droite station, the car stops level with the top of the court yard of the Palace, at the end of the rue des Reservoirs (entrance on the left).

The Grille d'Honneur (Gate of Honour, or principal entrance) of wrought iron, gilded, in Louis XIV style, surmounted by the royal fleur-de-lis. It was restored in 1879, as were also the groups of sculpture which flank it : on the right, France Victorious over the Empire, by G. Marsy, over Spain, by Girardon; on the left, Peace, by Tuby, Abundance, by Coysevox.

The court yard which we enter is known as the Avant-Cour (forecourt) or Cour des Ministres (Ministers' Court). This court yard, which has preserved its original paving (straight lines in the stones to right and left mark the positions which the Swiss Guard took up on parade) is flanked by two wings in stone and brick, known as the Ailes des Ministres, formerly occupied by the Ministers and Secretaries of State. The roofs, disfigured, were ornamented in the time of Louis XIV with gilded leads. A double row of heavy statues, destined originally for the Concorde bridge, Paris, represent some of France's great men. They were clumsily placed in their present positions by Louis-Philippe, and the only one worthy of notice is the last on the left, towards the upper end (Condé, by David d'Angers). It was in this court yard that Montgolfier and Pilâtre de Rozier in 1783 and 1784, before Louis XVI and Marie-Antoinette, carried out their first aerostatical experiments.

At the spot marked by the equestrian statue of Louis XIV (by Petitot and Cartellier; 1835) stood a second gate, separating the forecourt from the inner court, or Cour Royale, where only the privileged were allowed to enter. The less favoured callers were carried in hired chairs to the other entrances to the Palace. The Cour Royale is flanked by two heavy and inelegant colonnaded pavilions, of the neo-Greek style; that on the right was erected unded Louis XV, by the architect Gabriel (1772); that on the left, was only built under the Restoration, by the architect Dufour (1829) to balance the other pavilion. When the palace was transformed into a museum, Louis-Philippe had inscribed on the pediment : « A toutes les Gloires de la France » (to the Great Glory of France). These pavilions took the place of two earlier ones, of a lesser altitude, with peristyle and terrace, of the same style as the Cour de Marbre.

Beyond the Cour Royale, deepening it, is the charming Cour de Marbre (Marble Court) with its facades of stone and brick, occupying the place of the first court of the simple chateau erected by Louis XIII. This may be likened to the kernel around which Versailles has grown. The facades erected by Louis XIII were completely transformed and really reconstructed for Louis XIV, first by the architect Le Vau and later by Mansart. In the walls, niches and brackets of white marble carry 80 antique busts; on each side of the clock are reclining figures

Cour de Marbre.

(Mars, by G. Marsy, and Hercules, by Girardon); whilst crowning the sides of the court are other groups by Marsy, Coysevox, Massou, Raon, Le Hongre, Regnaudin, Girardon and Lespingola, representing allegorical figures (Justice, Wisdom, Glory, etc.) and the Four Quarters of the Globe. Under Louis XIV a passage was made at the end of the court yard communicating with the park. On the central balcony of wrought iron, gilded, on the first floor, are the windows of the King's Apartment; it was at this balcony that Marie-Antoinette showed herself, on October 6th, 1789, in order to calm the mob that had invaded the palace and the courtyards, when Louis XVI promised to re-enter Paris (See History, p. 19). The ground of the courtyard was formerly higher, five steps leading up to it; it was lowered to its present level under Louis-Philippe and the unfortunate effect of this can be seen at the base of the columns and the windows of the ground floor. On the left of the court yard is the Escalier de Marbre (Marble staircase) (See p. 51) which leads direct to the King's Apartment.

From the Cour de Marbre we return to the Aile Gabriel (Gabriel wing) and, turning to the left, pass between this wing and the Chapel to the Vestibule de la Chapelle (cloak room; not compulsory to leave one's things, except umbrellas on rainy days) by which we enter the Palace. In this entrance hall; Ionic pillars and fine doors of carved wood of the time of Louis XIV. There is here also a bas-relief by Nicolas and Guillaume Coustou, allegory of the Grossing of the Rhine by Louis XIV (Louis XIV, crowned by Victory, spurns the Rhine, under the guise of an old man crowned with reeds). The door of the Chapel is not always open, but it is from the first floor that the best view of it is obtained. A small staircase of stone, on the left of the door of the Chapel (notice board : Appartements Royaux, or Royal Apartments) leads up to the first floor; the Gallery which we leave to the left would conduct us to the Salle des Croisades and to the Opera (p. 58 and p. 56). This entrance is hardly a worthy one for such a vast palace; at the time of the changes made by Louis XV and the destruction of the magnificent Escalier des Ambassadeurs (Ambassadors' staircase), which served this side of the palace in the time of Louis XIV, it had been intended to build another staircase to replace it, but this was never done.

The Chapel staircase brings us to the FIRST FLOOR, into a remarkable Vestibule (r. 83) of white stone (doors of carved wood, white and gold), the work of Mansart and Robert de Cotte (busts of both, by Coysevox). Elegant statues by Bousseau (Magnanimity; a lion at the feet) and by Vassé (Glory; upholding the medallion of Louis XV). From this vestibule opens out the Tribune Royale overlooking the Chapel.

The Chapel, built at the end of the reign of Louis XIV, by Mansart, finished by his nephew Robert de Cotte (1699 to 1710) is a work of the first order. Its sumptuous aspect, light effect, rich carving, the harmony of gold on white stone, which make of it a palace of God in the palace of a king, are the objects of great admiration. The Tribune Royale serves somewhat as a belvedere from which to admire the ensemble of the edifice; it is rather to this point than to the ground floor that all the harmony of the lines is directed. Right before us is the principal altar, in marble and bronze sculptured and gilded (sculpture by Van Cleve and Guillaume Coustou; the ground floor is covered with mosaic of coloured marble; the stained glass windows (monogram of Louis XIV and the arms of France) were restored in 1852, at the famous Sevres factories; the paintings on the ceiling, of striking wealth of colour, complete the grandeur of the whole in the centre of the roof, the Eternal Father in his Glory, by Antoine Coypel; above the Tribune Royale, Descent of the Holy Ghost, by Jouvenet). During divine service all the members of the court turned their backs to the altar and faced the king, who attented mass daily, but descending only to the ground floor when a bishop officiated. It was in this chapel (where he sang always in a loud false voice) that Louis XVI and Marie-Antoinette were married on May 16th 1770.

Leaving to the right the second gallery of sculpture (p. 59) which would lead us to the Salles de Crimée (p. 56) and to the Opera-house (p. 56) we enter, on the left, the Salon d'Hercule.

Salon d'Hercule (r. 105) was fitted up under Louis XV, Louis XIV style, with coloured marble, in the place of an ancient chapel, predecessor of the present one. Vassé worked from 1729 to 1734 at its rich decoration of bronze sculpture, including the chimney-piece, the pilasters and the enormous frame at the end of the room. In this frame was formerly the celebrated Feast at the House of Simon the Pharisee, by Paul Veronese, presented to Louis XIV by the Republic of Venice, and which is to-day in the Grand Salon of the Louvre, Paris; its place has been taken by a picture representing the Crossing of the Rhine by Louis XIV, repainted by P. Franque, in 1834, of Le Brun and Van der Meulen. — On the chimney-piece, Louis XIV, by Mignard, which also replaces a Veronese. — On the ceiling, vast composition by Le Moine (18 metres 50 by 17 metres; 20 yards by 18 yds 22″; 142 figures) representing the Apotheosis of Hercules (Love and Virtue, in a chariot drawn by Genii, present Hercules to Jupiter). The painter worked for seven years at this masterpiece, from 1729 to 1736, and the gigantic task so affected his mind that on its completion he committed suicide. He had received for this work 10,000 écus, but his expenses alone during its execution came to 29,000 pounds (£ 4,640, our money). — In this Salon d'Hercule was posted a company of the Swiss Guards, guarding the entrance to the Grands Appartements, principally to prevent the intrusion, as the old regulation has it, of « those freshly marked with the small pox, those shabbily dressed, those with petitions, begging friars and dogs ».

The entrance to the Grand Apartments is by the Salon de l'Abondance (r. 106), where refreshments were served when receptions were held by the king, and which on such occasions was filled with tables laden with liqueurs, wines, cakes and fruit.

The Grand Apartments, or Appartements de Parade, were not inhabited by the king. They served only for receptions, for card parties, music, billiards and collations. The king here moved freely among his guests. The decorations in marble marquetry, sculptured and gilded bronzes, carved wood doors and painted ceilings date from Louis XIV and are the work of the best artists, to whom Le Brun was general adviser. During winter, the walls were covered with green or red velvet, or with Gobelins tapestry, which has in places been rehung; during summer, they were covered with silk brocades worked with flowers of varied hues, embroidered in gold or silver. The first furniture of the room was manufactured at the Gobelins factories, and comprised tables, seats, large and small, cressets, branched candlesticks and flambeaux, vases in gold and silver filagree. All these master-pieces of art were ignominiously carried off to the Mint by order of Louis XIV, during the wars of 1689-1690, to be melted down and turned into coin to help meet the expenses of his campaigns. This was a deplorable act which realised little and very justly moved the rest of Europe to mirth and derision. The monarch need only have sold a few of the diamond studs with which he was literally covered, even to his garters and shoe buckles, to have realised a hundred times more than he did and thus have avoided this act of vandalism. Such as they are, the Grands Appartements are one of the most interesting parts of the Palace, one of those which have best retained the cachet of a departed age. A certain number of fine pieces of furniture have been reinstalled in these apartments.

The ceiling, much restored, of the Salon de l'Abondance, painted by Houasse, represents Abundance or Royal Magnificence (Pluto, Neptune and Thetis; figure of Abundance carrying a sceptre of gold and reclining against a horn of plenty from which flow medals, pearls and other jewels). On the walls, pictures by Van der Meulen (Siege and Capture of Charleroi, Lille, Valenciennes, Cambrai and Fribourg), which cover places formerly occupied by a Carrache, a Guido Reni and a Veronese, which hung there in the days of Louis XIV. — The seats, covered with tapestry, seen in this room and in a certain number of the other rooms of the palace were used at the coronation of Charles X.

Off the Salon de l'Abondance open two small rooms (r. 137 and 138) now transformed, which under Louis XIV formed the Cabinet des Medailles the neucleus of the collection transferred to the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. In this room are now exhibited gouaches by Van Blarenberghe (noteworthy on account of their exactitude and minute detail) representing the compaigns of the reign of Louis XV, and ancient French military costumes. – Beyond these two rooms: r. 139, called the Salon of the States General, installed under Louis-Philippe (a frise by Boulanger depicting the March of the members of the States General, in 1789, at its openeing). Here have been hung, for want of space elsewhere, some modern canvases; Aimé Morot, Reichshoffen (1870 War); de Neuville, Champigny (idem); G. Bertrand, Funeral of President Carnot, assassinated at Lyons, 1894.

From the Salon de l'Abondance we pass into the Salon de Vénus (r. 107) at the top of the Escalier des Ambassadeurs (Ambassadors' staircase) or King's Staircase, destroyed under Louis XV. The marble decorations in this room are noteworthy and constitute one of the finest specimens of the early style of Louis XIV, inspired by the art of Italy. This apartment was used for collations on reception days, or as the king's apartment. — In the central alcove, fine statue of Louis XIV, in Roman costume and wearing a wig, by Warin; on each side, alabaster vases of the period. — On the right and left of the room, cleverly executed paintings, prolonging a fictitious perspective, by Jacques Rousseau, in imitation of the Italian. — The carved wood doors are the work of Caffieri; the bas-reliefs in bronze above the doors are of remarkable beauty. The ceiling, by Houasse, represents the Triumph of Venus (the central subject is the goddess in her chariot reclining against a swan; around her, Mars, Vulcan, Bacchus, Neptune and Jupiter, covered with garlands of roses). Among the subjects on the rounded part of the ceiling: Nebuchadnezzar and Semiramis and the gardens of Babylon (an allusion to the laying out of the park of Versailles by Louis XIV).

Salon de Diane (r. 108), was a billiards room in the time of Louis XIV. Two raised stands, covered with Persian carpet, enabled the ladies to watch the play. As in the last room, fine marble decorations, carved wood and bronze. — In the centre, bust of Louis XIV by Le Bernin (1665), beneath a crown of gilded bronze, carried by winged figures of children. — The ceiling, by Blanchard, shows Diana, with her attributes (Seated on her chariot, she is surrounded by the hours of the Night, of the Morning, of Work, of Repose and of Vigil); other subjects symbolise the Hunt and Navigation. — Above the chimney-piece, Marie-Thérèse, wife of Louis XIV, by Beaubrun, and, in the marble of the chimney, small bas-relief in white marble (the Flight into Egypt) by Van Opstal. — Table in carved wood, gilded (the top is of Florentine mosaic) made at the Gobelins factories under Louis XIV, and autograph of Mansart, on a deed initiated by Louis XIV, relating to the works at Versailles (the king recommends the artist to « employ child subjects everywhere »). — Busts of Colbert and of the Grand-Dauphin (son of Louis XIV) by Coysevox.

Salon de Mars (r. 109), play room, then ball room and concert room under Louis XIV. — The walls are covered with Gobelins tapestries (Capture of Dôle and Louis XIV entering Dunkerque); on the floor, magnificent carpet of the Savonnerie of Paris. — On the chimney-piece, Louis XIV, by Simon Vouet (the king at about the age of ten; he is mounted on a white horse). — The ceiling, by Audran, represents Mars, the god of war, in a chariot drawn by wolves. The accompanying motifs show many famous warriors (Caesar, Cyrus, Constantine, Marcus Aurelius) by Audran, Houasse and Jouvenet. Above the doors (Justice, Temperance, Force. Prudence) by Simon Vouet, replacing earlier pictures by Titien. — King David, by Dominiquin, formerly hung in Louis XIV's bed room. — On the table, colonnade in neo-Greek style, executed in the time of Louis XV for Marie-Antoinette, then dauphine. — Automatic clock, constructed in 1706 for Louis XIV by Morand (every time it strikes the hour, two cocks appear and crow, beating their wings, whilst a bust of Louis XIV arises crowned by Victory).

Salon de Mercure (r. 110), gaming room under Louis XIV (cards and other games of chance), afterwards the bed room. A show bedstead, with posts surmounted by white plumes and closed in by a balustrade of worked silver, but only used on exceptional occasions by the king; his grandchild Philippe, Duke of Anjou, sometimes slept in it, after being proclaimed

King of Spain (1700); the body of Louis XIV was exposed in this bed for a week after his death. The marble decorations of this room have been destroyed, and the balustrade of silver was melted down at the Mint by Louis XIV's orders (See p. 27). — Numerous pictures by the masters graced the walls, to-day covered with Gobelin tapestries (Sieges of Tournai and Douai; Defeat of the Spaniards at Bruges); on the floor, beautiful carpe of the Savonnerie. — Ceiling, by J.-B. de Champaigne, represents Mercury (in his chariot, drawn by two cocks, and preceded by the morning star): the secondary motifs illustrate the Histories of Alexander the Great, Ptolmy and Augustus.

Salon d'Apollon (r. 111), ancient Throne Room, where the king received the ambassadors in audience. The throne was of silver, but was also melted down at the Mint; on the ceiling can still be seen the hooks that supported the canopy. Pictures by Van Dyck and Rubens, to-day in the Louvre, formerly decorated this room. — The fine ceiling by La Fosse represents Apollo (in his chariot drawn by four horses, accompanied by Spring, Summer, Autum and Winter). The symbol of the god of day personifies, of course, Louis XIV and is in evidence everywhere as a decorative motif both in the Palace and the park. The reader will have noticed the connection between the names of the other rooms and this one: Apollo, the sun; Diana, the moon; Mars and Mercury, the stars. The secondary motifs of the ceiling are equally subjects of antiquity: Coriolanus at the siege of Rome; Vespasien building the Coliseum; Augustus building the port of Mysene; Porus before Alexander. On the walls, Gobelin tapestries (Meeting of Louis XIV and Philippe IV of Spain; Marriage of Louis XIV and the Infanta of Spain (Marie-Thérèse); Audience of the Ambassador of Spain). — Remarkable locks in worked bronze, gilded.

Here ended the Grands Appartements of the king, and we now reach the central part of the Palace.

Salon de la Guerre (War) (r. 112). This small salon, forming a pair with the Salon de la Paix (Peace) (p. 39) at the other extremity of the Galerie des Glaces, forms part of the magnificent decorative ensemble of the gallery. It was finished in 1678. Its decoration of polychrome marble and bronze (arms and trophies embedded in the walls) is intact. Six busts of Roman emperors, in coloured marble and with heads of porphyry, of Italian workmanship, were bequeathed by Mazarin to Louis XIV; the draperies were remoddled by Girardon. — Bevelled mirrors in the false doors. — On the chimney-piece, Louis XIV on horseback, bas-relief in stucco, by Coysevox (his enemies, vanquished, are trodden underfoot by his mount; two captives, bound with floral festoons, support the oval of the bas-relief).

Cl. P. Grayer.

Galerie des Glaces, or Gallery of Mirrors.

The ceiling, painted by the celebrated Le Brun, represents France Victorious, armed, in a mantle covered with fleur-de-lis: in one hand she holds lightning, and in the other an ornamented portrait of Louis XIV. In the motifs of the lower parts of the ceiling are to be seen: Germany on her knees, on a heap of arms, shielding herself with her buckler; Holland, thrown back upon her symbolic lion, with her vessels in flames and her soil inundated; Spain, with a spear in her hands, with which she is vainly menacing France in the central motif; her soldiers are flying in all directions; Bellona in anger; the wild goddess of war, with discord following in her wake, setting on fire temples and palaces, whilst Themis has fallen with the scales of justice, and Charity is in flight. — These paintings, symbolical of the zenith of Louis XIV's triumphs, well representing the monument of pride erected to the « Sun Monarch » (they are continued throughout the Gallery of Mirrors) accurately represent the sentiment of France of that day towards the all powerful monarch. They produced among the conquered peoples, an effect more deadly than defeat, only, as a natural consequence, to be the cause of new alliances and new wars.

The Grande Galerie, or Galerie des Glaces (Gallery of Mirrors) is considered the master-piece of the art Louis XIV. Begun by Mansart, in 1679, included in his alterations made to the chateau of Le Vau, it was terminated by the completion of its decorations and paintings in 1682. Its decoration was executed under the direction of Le Brun, who also made the sketches for the ceiling. Quite an army of sculptors and bronze workers laboured on it, among whom mention must be made of Philippe Caffieri, Coysevox, Le Comte, Tuby, for the sculpture; Dominique Cucci, for the carved frames of the mirrors and the minor copper work; the silversmith Ladoiseau moulded part of the bronzes and trophies embedded in the walls.

The Grande Galerie (which is terminated by the Salon de la Paix, forming a pair to the Salon de la Guerre, to which we shall return later, p. 39) measures 72 m. (78 1/3 yards) in length; 10 m. 50 (10 1/8 yards) broad and 13 m. (14 1/3 yards) high in the centre. It is lighted by 17 large arched windows, facing on to the park and its fountains and lakes, its masses of trees and the admirable perspective of the Grand Canal; most beautiful and varied are the views from them. Facing the windows and doubling their light are 17 false windows built of square bevelled mirrors, connected by gilded copper work. From side to side of the room, between the true and false windows, are connected pilasters of red marble, with worked bronze capitals (foliage intermingled with cocks' heads, symbol of France, fleur-de-lis, symbol of royalty, and suns, the personal device of Louis XIV). Four niches of marble contain statues in white marble: Venus, Paris, Mercury and Minerva, copies from the antique, replacing older statues. The cornice is in stucco, gilded.

The ceiling, colossal work, executed on canvas by Le Brun and his pupils from his sketches and models, comprises 6 principal motifs and 22 minor ones, interspaced between the larger; two other paintings at each extremity of the room, above the doors of the Salons de la Guerre and de la Paix. All these paintings represent the Wars and Victories of France against Holland, Germany and Spain, the Peace imposed by Louis XIV on his enemies, the Ambassadors sent by him to all the peoples of the earth, the Protection accorded by him to the Arts and to his People, the great Foundations by which he honoured his reign. As remarked before, all this forms one of the vastest monuments raised to the glory and pride of one man, who, it must be said, stood in the popular imagination for all that was dear to France.

The furniture of the Grande Galerie was composed in large part, like that of the Grands Appartements, of tables, chairs, small round tables, cressets, jugs and ewers in silver filagree, chased, plain or gilded; there were also tables in alabaster, from Italy, and ornamented vases in red porphyry. Two immense carpets from the Savonnerie covered the floor. The curtains which hung at the windows were of white silk damask, with the monogram of Louis XIV, and cost 1050 pounds each (£168 of our money). In large silver vases were orange trees, especially at their flowering season. Nearly all the furniture had been manufactured, carved and worked at the Gobelins factory, which at that time was not merely a factory for the manufacture of tapestry, but made all sorts of objects of art. It is in the Grande Galerie that the throne was often placed on which Louis XIV sat, dressed in a jerkin and hat both resplendent with diamonds of a total value of 60 million francs (£2 400 000). Up to the time of the Revolution, the great receptions and fetes, and notably masked balls, were held in this Grande Galerie; at one of these Louis XV appeared in a costume covered with the leaves of the yew tree.

By a bitter turn of fortune, it was in this same room that on January 18th, 1871, the all-conquering King of Prussia was crowned with the imperial diadem of Germany during the disasters which overcame France. Nearer to our own time, a brilliant reception was held in this gallery in honour of the Emperor and Empress of Russia, on October 8th, 1896.

Two doors, covered with mirrors, open into the Gallery and face the windows overlooking the park. We go to the second, which gives access to the Œil-de-Bœuf.

The Œil-de-Bœuf (literally, bull's eye) (r. 123), thus named on account of the small oval window above the window at the end of the room (a false Œil-de-Bœuf is to be seen over the chimney-piece) served as an antechamber to the King's Chamber. This room has preserved its beautiful decorations of the time of Louis XIV, of which the stucco frise around the ceiling should be specially noticed. It represents, against a gilded background, infant games (some children are running after birds; others are sporting with lions and other animals; others jumping and skipping, dancing or playing with arms); it is the work of the sculptors Van Cleve, Hurtrell and Flamen. — On the chimney-piece, bust of Louis XIV, by Coysevox, ample in line and noble of aspect. — Fine table of the time. — Curious picture by Nocret, representing in mythological costume, following the custom prevalent at the time, Louis XIV and his family (Louis XIV, half nude, as Apollo; a little above, Marie-Thérèse, his wife, as Mother of Cherubins; standing behind him, Mlle de Montpensier, his cousin, as Diana; his brother, as Star of the Morning, with Anne of Austria, his mother, as Cybele; Henrietta of England, first wife of his brother, as Flora). — Several royal portraits by Mignard, De Troy and Beaubrun.

The Œil-de-Bœuf was constructed in 1701, where formerly were two apartments, one of which had served up to that time as King's Chamber; it was in this chamber that the famous French playwriter, Molière, worked for some time as an upholsterer. When the present chamber was installed, the Œil-de-Bœuf became a waiting room where the princes and nobles (from which it derives its other name of Salon des Nobles), favoured with admittance to the King's bed chamber at his rising in the morning, awaited their master's awakening. For the Dauphin and the princes of royal bood, the door was flung wide open; for others, one half only was opened and immediately shut. This usage was in vogue right up to the time of the Revolution, and Sebastien Mercier has left us a picturesque idea of the Œil-de Bœuf of his day: « There lives there a square-shouldered, colossal Swiss guard. He drinks, eats and sleeps in this antechamber and never leaves it. A simple screen separates his bed and his table from the powers of this world. Twelve sonorous words are embedded in his mind and comprise his whole service vocabulary: — Pass, Gentlemen, Pass! — Gentlemen, the King! — Withdraw, please! — No admittance, my Lord! — and Monseigneur retires without a word. No dignity can overawe him. He opens for the master. The rest of the people of this earth are equal in his eyes. The presents he receives amount to 500 louis of gold, for none would dare put in his hand so base a metal as silver. »

The Œil-de-Bœuf was reached directly by the Escalier de Marbre (Marble Staircase) giving on to the Cour de Marbre (Marble Court), and to which two rooms now lead on the right (Antechamber and King's Guard-Room; r. 121 and 120, p. 46).

The King's Chamber or Bed-room of Louis XIV opens on the left in the Œil-de-Bœuf, and, like it, overlooks the Cour de Marbre (See p. 23) of which its windows facing direct to the East can be seen. It was arranged for Louis XIV by Mansart, in 1701, at the time of the last reorganisation of the Palace, and is of great interest. Its decorations in carved wood, white and gold, have been preserved. A gilded balustrade separates the bed from the rest of the room, and is authentic. The bed, however, is an inexact copy of the time of Louis-Philippe (Louis XIV's bed had posts and was completely shut in by curatins), but the material of the hood and canopy, formed of assorted pieces put together somewhat haphazard, is really ancient, and came, it is believed, from the show bedstead in the Salon de Mercure (p. 29); its mythological subjects are reputed to have been embroidered by Delobel, chief upholsterer to the king. The marvellous lace bed-spread, with intermingled letters of Louis XIV and Marie-Thérèse, was made about 1682 for the queen's own bed. — On each side of the bed, ancient armchairs (those used in the time of Louis XIV were of crimson velvet) and two fine pieces of Boulle furniture, in wood, inlaid with copper and marquetry. — The royal Holy Water basin, saved by private purchase at the great sale at the time of the Revolution by an old lady inhabitant of Versailles. — Figure in wax of Louis XIV, by Antoine Benoist, covered with a wig perhaps worn by the king himself, of a wonderful realism and one of the most precious portraits of Louis XIV in existence (he was then 68 years of age). — On the walls, which were draped during winter with velvet, and during summer with Lyons brocade with a background of violet and crimson, two pictures, religious subjects, of the school of Carrache hang in the place of a picture of Saint-John at Patmos, attributed to Raphael (at present in the Museum of Marseilles), and David playing the harp, since returned to the palace of Versailles (Salon de Diane, p. 29) which hung here in the time of Louis XIV. — 2 large candelabras in carved wood, gilded, of the time of Louis XVI. — The ceiling is in its original state: above the bed, centre bit decorated with sculpture work in gilded stucco by Nicolas Coustou (Figures with trumpets, and, in the centre, France watching over the king, with crown and sceptre, amidst trophies). Also in this room, two chimney-pieces of the time of Louis XV: on the one on the left (looking towards the bed) fine life-like bust of the Duchess of Bourgogne (daughter-in-law of Louis XIV and mother of Louis XV) by Coysevox. — In the medallions above the doors (these were doubled by velvet-covered doors) portraits of Louis XIII (after Ph. de Champaigne), of Anne of Austria (by Mignard) of the Duke of Bourgogne, son of Louis XIV (after Rigaud) and of the Duchess of Bourgogne (after Santerre), which were hung here by Louis-Philippe and replace older pictures which had been removed, two of them by Van Dyck. — Above the cornice, The Four Evangelists, painted by Valentin, which hung here in the time of Louis XIV.

Numerous are the souvenirs connected with this room. It was here that the cérémonie du lever (king's rising) took place, at which were present only those who had the honour of possessing the entrée, petite or grande, according to the time at which they were admitted. The valet de chambre, between eight and half past, drew aside the curtains around his royal master's bed. Louis XIV, in his night-cap, on waking first wiped his face, then washed his hands in spirits over a silver-gilt dish. Next he prayed, his prayer lasting about a quarter of an hour. After choosing the wig that he intended to don for the day, he got out of bed, put on his slippers and his dressing gown, and seated himself in his armchair. The Grand Chambellan then proceeded to take off his night cap, put on a wig temporarily, and, whilst giving audience to those present, Louis XIV would put on his haut-de-chausse, his stockings, his garters and his shoes, finally letting fall his dressing gown, which two valets then spread as a screen before him. Then he would take his shirt from the hands of a prince of the blood, noble or dignitary of the chamber, who would assist him on with it. The retirement of the king (or coucher du roi) took place with much the same ceremony. The successors of Louis XIV, even when they no longer slept in this room, returned to it morning and evening to go through these traditional ceremonies. — The king lunched here about one o'clock at a little round table placed before the middle window, in circumstances of as much ceremony regarding the manner in which dishes were served up. — It is in this room, too, that Louis XIV breathed his last, September 1st, 1715. His body was exposed in the Chambre de parade.

Connected with this room is one tragic souvenir, that of the 6th October, 1789, the last day of royalty at Versailles. The people of Paris the night before, the women dragging at the heavy guns, had marched on Versailles. The palace had almost succumbed to a surprise attack when a number of the body guard had been massacred (See, p. 45). All this redoutable throng, with pike and sword, cannon and musket, wrought up to a height of passion, were encamped even to within the Cour de Marbre, where over huge fires they roasted horses for food. The royal family, Louis XVI, Marie-Elisabeth and the royal children, were huddled together in a state of terror. La Fayette came, in the name of the people, to beg the queen to show herself at the window. At first she hesitated, then yielded to his desire, and holding the little dauphin by the one hand and her daughter by the other, went to the balcony; the king also showed himself, whilst the crowd sent up a mighty shout: « Le Roi à Paris! » (« The King in Paris! », meaning that his place should be in Paris in the midst of his people, not at Versailles). Louis XVI was obliged to promise to return that day to Paris. It was for all of them the road to the prison and the scaffold.

The Cabinet du Conseil (Council Chamber) (r. 125) which comes after the king's chamber, dates from Louis XV (1775) and is in its original state; under Louis XIV it formed two rooms; a smaller Council Chamber, overlooking the Cour de Marbre, and a Cabinet des Perruques, where the royal wigs were hung in rows. — Its wood-work, carved and gilded, is magnificent and marks the evolution of a new, more graceful and more delicate style of art; it is by Antoine Rousseau, who received 21,000 pounds for his work. — Fine red marble chimney-piece, Louis XV style, with sculptured bronze, and fine clock. — Above the doors, paintings by Houasse (History of Minerva) taken from the Grand Trianon. — The table and writing desk are not authentic.

It is here that Louis XV whiled away many an hour opening and reading the private correspondence sent to him by the post office in Paris: here, too, it was that Madame du Barry, in a moment of playful distraction, threw a whole packet of state papers into the fire. On the mantle piece was placed the knife, after the attempt, with which Damien tried to stab Louis XV. More than once the mirrored door which opens on to the Galerie des Glaces swung to behind the lady of the court desired by the king, and diplomatically drawn here by the valet de chambre. Le Bel for his infamous master's pleasure. — It was in this room that M. de Brézé came on the 23rd June, 1789, to inform the astonished Louis XVI of the resistence of the Deputies of the Third Estate, who had been summoned to disperse, and to report the famous reply of Mirabeau that they would disperse only at the point of the bayonet.

On to the Cabinet du Conseil open the Appartements de Louis XV (a guardian shows visitors over : small tip general). The visit to these apartments is specially recommanded.

The Appartements de Louis XV, or Cabinet du Roi, were constructed by order of Louis XV about 1738, as a relief to the pompeus apartments built by Louis XIV, and to enable him occasionally to taste the pleasures of a freerer and more private life when unoccupied with the affairs of state and court. — Chambre de Louis XV (r. 126) magnificently decorated with carved wood by Verberckt; a balustrade, since destroyed, enclosed the back part of the alcove. Gobelins tapestries (Story of Don Quixote). The old paintings above the doors were replaced by portraits of the daughters of Louis XV. Even when he lived in this room, Louis XV went every morning and every night to the great official chamber of Louis XIV for the ceremony connected with his rising and retiring; and Louis XVI, who in his turn occupied the room, did the same. It was here that Louis XV, stricken down by small pox, was brought from the Petit Trianon on April 17th, 1774. On the 10th May he died, and on the 12th, in a horribly decomposed condition, his body was put into a bier, placed in a carriage and hurried off to Saint Denis at a gallop by the light of torches, whilst the common people of Versailles greeted the passing corpse with cries of «Tally ho! tally ho!» A door in the alcove opens upon a small wardrobe (closet) of Louis XVI's time. — CABINET DE LA PENDULE (clock room) (r. 127), decorated in the same magnificent style with carved wood-work by Verberckt, a veritable lace work of gold. The room derives its name from the Passement clock, withheld from the great sale of the palace furniture and placed in safe keeping during the Revolution, to-day back in its old place. It is a marvellous piece of work, executed in 1753 (chased by Caffieri) surmounted by a crystal globe which marks the phases of the sun as well as [illegible] the [illegible] and planets, after Copernicus's system. In the floor will be seen a copper meridian attributed to Louis XVI, but which really dates from Louis XV. Chimney piece in grey-violet marble. The space above the doors has been decorated in the same style as the rest of the room. Tables in stucco, plans of the Royal Forests. — CABINET DES CHIENS (The Hounds Anteroom) (r. 128) called also the Cabinet des Chasses (Hunting Anteroom) without doubt on account of its handsome frise in stucco representing hunting scenes. This room was occupied by the lackeys and the king's favourite hounds, who had special niches and benches to rest upon. There are in this room portraits (recollected) of artists of the time of Louis XVI (Le Brun, Van der Meulen, Mansart, Pierre Puget, Coysevox), and of Louis XIV, Colbert and Louvois. It is in this room that the Escalier Intérieur du Roi (King's Staircase) ends, the staircase by which he was wont to descend direct from his small apartments in the Cour Royale or pass up into the apartments occupied by Mme du Barry and his other mistresses (See below). At the foot of this staircase, on the 5th January 1757, Damiens struck at him with a knife, without, however, doing much damage, which did not prevent the would-be assassin from being put to terrible torture. — SALLE A MANGER (r. 129) private dining-room of Louis XV, where he took his meals in the company of his daughters, or with Mme de Pompadour; supper was also served here on the return from the chase. The decorations of the woodwork are simple and delicate. Under a table, between the windows, locksmith's tools which belonged to Louis XVI, whose favourite hobby was making keys and locks (See below). Pictures on porcelaine (hunting scenes of Louis XVI). Small busts of Louis XV and Marie Leczinska. Porcelaine clock of the time of Louis XV. This room overlooks the Cour des Cerfs, greatly altered; its name comes from the heads of deer, carved and painted, which ornament the walls. Here hunting ceremonies took place under Louis XIV.

This brings to an end the visit to the Apartments of Louis XV. They contain a certain number of other rooms, either of his time or reconstructed under his successor, which are not now open to visitors. — Above these apartments, over the Cour de Marbre and beneath the roof, was the apartment of the famous Mme du Barry, now fallen into ruin, where Louis XV visited his mistress by the small stairway from the Cabinet des Chiens (See above). — Overlooking the Cour des Cerfs are a number of other small rooms where Louis XV passed his time at his hobbies, principally pastry making. — In the upper floor there is a small forge, known as the Forge de Louis XVI, where that unlucky monarch used to work at his key and lock making, and where, aided by Gamain, he made the famous iron chest in which he hid important state documents at the time of the Revolution, and which he took with him to the Tuileries. Gamain was the victim of attempted poisoning, (but by whose hand remains one of the problems of history), for which he blamed the king. He then betrayed the secret of the iron chest, thus contributing to the final condemnation of Louis XVI. All these small rooms are, however, closed to the public.

Back once more in the Cabinet du Conseil, we re-enter the Galerie des Glaces, which we follow, this time on the left, right through to the Salon de la Paix (Peace r. 114) which forms a pendant to the Salon de la Guerre (p. 30) with similar decorations, and marks the turning the building takes towards the South Wing, the Orangerie and the Piece d'Eau des Suisses. — Green marble Chimney-piece with two vases of porphyry and a Cleopatra (or Ariadne) antique (copy). — Above the chimney-piece, Louis XV bestowing peace upon Europe, by F. Le Moine (1729; a general peace treaty had been signed two years previously). — The ceiling, of the time of Louis XIV, painted by Le Brun, is in honour of Peace, which, in the centre motif, precedes France in a chariot drawn by four turtle doves; the other nations all around are shown happy and tranquil. — The Salon de la Paix was the Queen's Card-Room, from which point the apartments began.

Chambre de la Reine (Queen's Chamber, r. 115), dates from Louis XIV, but was reconstructed under Louis XV and Louis XVI. A silver balustrade, replaced by one of gilded wood, as in the king's chamber, separated the queen's bed from the rest of the room; the same ceremony of rising and retiring took place here. The hooks which held the canopy of the bed can still be seen. The ancient panellings of marble were replaced under Louis XV by tapestry and by three large mirrors whose frames, it is believed, were carved by Vanberckt. Louis Philippe had two of them destroyed (there is a project to replace them) in the same style as the frame of the mirror between the windows. — On the walls, tapestries representing incidents in the story of Esther, after De Troy (Swoon, Repose and Crowning of Esther). — Above the doors : Youth and Virtue present to France the daughters of Louis XV, by Natoire; Glory, with the royal children (the son of Louis XV and his two elder sisters) by De Troy. The woodwork of the doors dates from 1748. — On the ceiling, in the curve, four cameos by Boucher (Charity, Abundance, Faithfulness and Prudence); in the centre, cupola with turned mosaic; the ornamental sculpture in the angles is of gilded stucco (crowns, winged sphinxes, lions, eagles of the house of Austria) and was executed by Rousseau for Marie-Antoinette; their broad bold style recalls somewhat the time of Louis XIV. — At the end of the room, above two small covered doors, Marie Leczinska, wife of Louis XV, by Nattier (on the right), and Marie-Antoinette, by Mme Vigée Le Brun (on the left).

In this room Marie-Therese, wife of Louis XIV, died (30th june 1683); Philippe d'Anjou, who became king of Spain, grandchild of Louis XIV, was born here, as well as Louis XV (15th February, 1710). Marie Leczinska, wife of the latter, here gave birth to ten children, eight of them girls, and died here on the 24th June, 1768. To Marie-Antoinette were born in this same room two sons and two daughters, one of them the Dauphin, who, after the execution of his parents, met such a sad end, in the prison of the Temple. For reasons of state, the confinements were public; under Louis XIV there were present only a few nobles and valets, but little by little almost anyone was able to be present, and at the first confinement of Marie-Antoinette the room was so filled with people, some even standing on the furniture, that the heat became too much for the queen, with consequences which nearly proved fatal. The custom was then abolished. — A secret passage ran under the Œil-de-Bœuf, connecting the queen's and the king's rooms (See below).

At the end of the queen's chamber are two covered doors in the wainscoting. That on the left opens on to a corridor running to the Œil-de-Bœuf, used only by the king (See above). It was by this corridor that Marie-Antoinette took refuge in the apartments of Louis XVI on the 6th October 1789 when the revolutionary mob broke into the palace. The other door opens into the Cabinet de la Reine or Small Apartments of Marie-Antoinette. A guardian shows visitors round (small tip usual). This visit is highly recommended.—N.-B. As, when the visit is over, one does not come out into the same room, but into the Salle des Gardes de la Reine (p. 44), it is well to visit first the two rooms, facing on to the park, which follow the Salon de la Reine (r. 116, p. 43) and Antichambre de la Reine (Queen's antechamber), (r. 117, p. 44); the Small Apartments can be visited afterwards.

Marie-Antoinette's Salon.

The Private Apartments of Marie-Antoinette, or more exactly, Cabinet de la Reine, were, under Louis XIV, dependencies of small importance to the queen's apartments, where Marie-Therese had a private chapel. The Duke and Duchess of Bourgogne (son and daughter-in-law of Louis XIV) lived here for some time. The rooms were furnished and instalied between 1[illegible] and 1[illegible] then in 1746 for Marie Leczinska, who loved these private rooms where she could read, pray and meditate. They are to-day [illegible] their marvellous decorations, just as they were in the time of Marie Antoinette, from whom they derive their name of the Petits Appartements de Marie Antoinette. The ceilings are low, and the rooms look over a dismal courtyard where the rays of the sun penetrate only in the bright days of summer. In this vast palace it was the only refuge of privacy where the queen could, like the king in his private apartments (See p. 37), withdraw from the stringent etiquette of the official Court and live, in some small degree, the real home life enjoyed by her meaner subjects. It must not be forgotten that Marie-Antoinette also had other private apartments on the ground floor, since demolished, as well as beyond the walls of the palace at the Petit Trianon, where she spent much of her time. — BOUDOIR OR PETITE MÉRIDIENNE DE LA REINE, an exquisite room specially fitted up for Marie-Antoinette, about 1781, from drawings made by the architect Micque. In one corner, chimney-piece of red marble and worked copper; in two others, mirror-doors without tinfoil. Fine copper work around these mirrors (doubtless by de Gouthiere or Forestier) rose-bush in flower, intermingled with love-knots, torches, hearts pierced with arrows; at the base, the eagle of Austria; the locks bear the monogram of Marie-Antoinette. Charming gilded wood-work and, facing the window, niche with mirrors and sofa. — LIBRARY (painting studio of Marie Leczinska; refitted up for Marie-Antoinette). Elegant glass-windowed wardrobes, Louis XVI style, white and gold; below the little windows, drawers with the double-headed Austrian eagle; charming statuettes of Sevres ware representing Actors who performed at the Petit Trianon. Cleverly painted on the doors are the backs of bound volumes. — SMALL LIBRARY (bath room in the days of Marie Leczinska) used by the queen's ladies in waiting, wardrobes with curtains of blue silk; small box covered with silk, painted in gouache, offered to Marie-Antoinette by the town of Paris, in 1782, to hold the Dauphin's baby clothes.

GRAND CABINET OF SALON DE LA REINE (Queen's Room): the principal room of the suite on account not only of its decorations (1783) but of the souvenirs connected with it. The carved wood decorations are the work of the brothers Rousseau in the most typical Louis XV style; the increasing influence of antiquity is felt, as well as the birth of the coming Empire style, which mingles in this example with a quite French grace (winged sphinxes with women's heads, an ornament around the necks, smoking tripod braziers, lyres, garlands and bouquets of roses, flower-bedocked medallions; at the bottom of the panels, cupids blindfolded). Mirrored niche similar to that in the Petite Méridienne, draped in silk at the top (there is a curious optical illusion in connection with this room : at a certain spot one's image is reflected in the mirrors minut the head. After Marie-Antoinette's execution, a legend grew up thas one day she had a presentiment of her tragic end owing to this curious illusion). Fine chimney of red marble, ornaments and cariatides in gilded copper; small clock of china, marble and bronze which belonged to Marie-Antoinette. Furniture (reinstalled) very elegant, of the same transitory style as the wood-work in the room (round mahogany table with Egyptian heads), and luster by Gouthiere (cupids seated at the base of a torch). Bust of Marie-Antoinette, by Pajou, with characteristic stright forehead and somewhat prominent eyes. It was in this room that Marie-Antoinette passed a great part of her time; here she had her harp, a piano and work-basket. It was in this room that her most intimate friends visited her, the Polignacs, the Guignes, the Coignys, the Vandreuils, and the Guiches. None of them counted for much morally, and unfortunately caused the queen great prejudice in public opinion. It was here that the Duc de Lauzun dared to go so far as to make love to her, for which he was banished from her presence; here she received Gluck and posed for her portraits by Mme Vigée Le Brun. The little court-yard beneath these rooms, so dismal in its present state, was in those days brightened by flower beds. — BATH ROOM, paved with black and white tiles; the position of the bath can still be seen (the bath itself was eventually transferred to Fontainebleau) as can also the place where the taps protruded. The queen used this bath but little, bathing usually in her room.. Fine clock. — CHAMBRE DE REPOS resting room or SALON JAUNE yellow room), the drapings of silk are modern; narrow room where Marie-Antoinette's head lady in waiting used to sleep. Picture, with frame gilded in two tints, painted by Marie Leczinska. Landscape (copy) with cows, sheep and farm; below can be read « Marie, Reine de France, fecit 1753 ». — We leave the small apartments by the Salle des Gardes de la Reine (Hall of the Queen's bodyguard, r; 118, p. 44).

Salon de la Reine (Queen's Salon) (r. 126) also called Salon des Nobles. It is here that the Cercle de la Reine (Queen's Circle) met and where presentations were made to her; the queen's seat was at the end of the room on a dais covered by a canopy (the hooks can still be seen in the ceiling). The dead queens were exposed here, where the public filed before their biers. On the walls, Gobelins tapestries representing the Crowning of Louis XIV at Notre-Dame (on the right); Treaty of alliance between. Louis XIV and the Swiss (on the left). Louis XIV visiting the Gobelins factory (in the centre; this interesting tapestry shows us the furniture and vases of silver manufactured at the Gobelins works for the Palace of Versailles, which were later melted down at the Mint, under circumstances already related, See p 27). — Admirable jewel cabinet of Marie-Antoinette, Louis XVI style, with gilded carvings and medallions of white and blue china (it comes from the Château de Saint-Cloud). — The wood-work of the doors is of the time of Louis XIV and Louis XV; the ancient marble panels have disappeared.

— Mediocre ceiling by Michel Corneille (Louis XIV's reign); Mercury protecting the Arts and Sciences. In the angles, allegorical figures.

Antichambre or Salle du Grand Couvert de la Reine (Antechamber or Queen's dining-hall; r. 117). The ceiling represents the family of Darius at the feet of Alexander the Great, and is a copy of the same subject by Le Brun in the Louvre: edges of the ceiling, six cameos, representing illustrious queens (Radogune, Artemise, Zenobia, etc.). On the walls, Gobelins tapestries: Taking of Marsal; Capture of Lille; Audience of the Ambassador of Spain; Audience of the Nonce of the Pope; in the centre, the Arms of the Crown.

It was here that theatrical performances were given before the Duchess of Bourgogne a short time previous to the birth of Louis XV, in 1710 (Polyeucte and the Misanthrope, by Molière, were played), and where the queens of France ate in public, either alone or with the king and members of the French nobility. The public were admitted to see the diners at table, and this custom became general and popular under Marie Leczinska, who dined here daily. Marie Antoinette continued the custom when she was Dauphine. « The ushers », recounts Mme Campan in her memoires, « allowed every properly dressed person to enter, and the spectacle was the delight of the country folk; at the hour when the royal diners were at table, the stairs would be filled with simple folk on their way from one apartment to the other. After having seen the Dauphine at table eat her first dish, they went off to see the princes in the middle of their meal in another room (the princes kept up the same custom and the elder ladies of the royal family eat their dessert in a third ». Once a queen, Marie-Antoinette abolished this custom.

Salles des Gardes de la Reine (Hall of the Queen's Bodyguard, r. 118). (It is into this room that one emerges after visiting the Petits Appartements of Marie-Antoinette, See, p. 41). This room has preserved its coloured marble decorations from the time of Louis XIV; with the only exception that a wooden floor has replaced the old marble tiling. — On the chimney-piece and around the room, porphyry vases, Louis XIV style: above the chimney-piece, the Grand Dauphin and his family, old copy of a picture after Mignard; facing the chimney-piece, the Duchess of Bourgogne, by Santerre. — Table in carved and gilded wood, Louis XIV style, with marble marquetry work and sketch, Winter, by Girardon (the statue it represents is in the park). — Interesting series of marble busts, of the XVII and XVIII centuries (on the left of the chimney-piece, Marie-Antoinette by Le Comte; on the right, Louis XVI; facing the window, Marie Leczinska, cruelly realistic, by Guillaume Coustou; facing the chimney, busts with curious head-dresses of the time of Marie-Antoinette. — Ceiling by Noel Coypel (the elder) one of the finest in the palace; in the centre, Jupiter accompanied by Justice and Piety; on the edges, Ptolmy Philadelphia, Alexander Severus, Trajan and Solon. On the cornice, figures of men and women, in costumes worn during the reign of Louis XIV, leaning on their elbows, as if looking into the room; they are full of fresh, youthful colour, and possess something charmingly modern about their features.

Cl. P. Gruyer.
Louis XVI, by Houdon.

On the 6th October 1789, when the mob had invaded the palace, a certain number of the rabble managed to get into the Salle des Gardes de la Reine, from which they threatened to invade the apartments. Two of the guards flung themselves before the mob to prevent their entrance; the first, Varicour, was disarmed and dragged outside, where his head was struck off; the second, Durepair, who took his place, managed to free himself and give sufficient time to a third, Miomandre de Sainte-Marie, to warn Marie-Antoinette and cry out « Save the Queen! » In a moment he also was thrown to the floor, but not before the queen had had time to fly to the king's apartments, by the Œil-de-Bœuf. We have already pointed out (p. 36) how Louis XVI had to promise shortly after this to return to Paris.

From the Salle des Gardes de la Reine we pass, on the left, on to the landing of the Escalier de Marbre (Marble Staircase).

The Escalier de Marbre (Marble Staircase) or Escalier de la Reine (Queen's Staircase) dates from Louis XIV; commenced by Le Vau and terminated by Mansart, it formed a pendant to the Escalier des Ambassadeurs, or King's Staircase, on the other side of the Cour de Marbre, but destroyed under Louis XV (See p. 18).

This one was the more often used, even by the king, the other staircase being reserved for the grand ceremonies; by this staircase passed all those pressenting themselves at the Palace. Its marble decorations and gilded detail have been well preserved and are of great beauty. — On the upper landing, niche with group of cupids (in lead and pewter, gilded) by Masson, supporting an escutcheon bearing the interlaced initials of the king and queen, amidst quivers, torches and doves; above the doors, fine ornamental sphinxes, large and powerful in build; the capitals and bases of the pilasters are in carved and gilded bronze. — Fine loggia or vestibule, opening on to the Cour de Marbre. — Fine painting, in the Italian style, of palace in perspective, by Meusnier (the architecture), Poerson (the figures) and Blain de Fontenay (the flowers). — At the foot of the staircase, which goes down to the Cour de Marbre, fine bust of Louis XIV, by Warin.

[By the Marble Staircase and the Cour de Marbre one can leave the palace, if time is limited. — The staircase in stucco, the continuation of the principal staircase from the first floor landing, leads to the Attique du Midi and de Chimay (p. 64).]

Crossing the landing of the Escalier de Marbre, we enter the loggia overlooking the Cour de Marbre (Marble Court).

[On the left open the Salle des Gardes du Roi (r. 120; chimney-piece and cornices ancient, the rest of the room transformed; curious picture of the equestrian fête given by Louis XIV at the Tuileries on June 5th, 1662, and the King's Antechamber (r. 121; Louis XIV here dined in public, and received petitions every Monday; transformed like the preceding; pictures) by which we arrive above the Marble Staircase at the Œil-de-Bœuf and the King's Chamber (p. 33).]

On the right of the loggia a door opens on to the apartment of Mme de Maintenon. This apartment, which was presented to Mme de Maintenon by Louis XIV in 1682, and played a great historic role, was completely disfigured under Louis-Philippe. It is to-day filled with interesting pictures representing personages of the Court of Louis XIV and a certain number of artists who worked at Versailles.

Antechamber (r. 141). — This formed two small rooms, where the king came to visit Mme de Maintenon, married secretly to him. — Sebastien Bourdon. Fouquet. — Belle. The sculptor Louis Le Rambert. — Lallement. Berbier du Metz (keeper of the crown furniture). — Artist unknown. The Grand Dauphin (son of Louis XIV). — Lallemant. Ch. Perrault (author of those delightful fairy tales, Puss in Boots, etc.). — Artist unknown. The sculptor Girardon. — Claude Lefebvre. Colbert.

Bed-Chamber (r. 142). — The bed here was placed in a narrow alcove. This room was the centre of the government, and here Louis XIV came to transact the business of state, at the end of the day, with his ministers. Mme de Maintenon used to seat herself in an armchair with red damask coverings next to the fireplace which has since disappeared; the king sat on the opposite side. — Artist unknown. Mme de Sévigné. — Le Brun. Turenne. — P. Mignard. Count de Toulouse as a child (son of Louis XIV and Mme de Montespan). — Artist unknown. Louis XIV. — Artist unknown. Marshal de Rantzau. — Artist unknown. Pascal. — Van der Meulen. Louis XIV at Vincennes; Louis XIV at Fontainebleau. — Ant. Coypel. The goldsmith Claude Ballin (bronze vases in the park). — Dequoy, Marchioness de Louvois. — Artist unknown. Philippe of Orleans (the Regent) as a young man. — J. Nocret. Mlle de la Vallière. — Artist unknown. Louis XIV founding the Academy of Sciences (sketch). — Tournières. Dufresnoy, Crébillon, dramatic authors, and Bodin, king's physician (charming interior picture). — Artist unknown. Destouches (dramatic author).

Small Room following. — School of Mignard. Mme de Montespan. — Artist unknown. The Grand Dauphin's cabinet (ground floor Versailles palace; r. 49), about 1690. — Antoine Benoist. Louis XIV (drawing for the wax model in the Chambre du Roi; 1760). — Mignard (after). Mme de Maintenon. — Ant. Coypel. The Moroccan ambassadors at the Italian theatre (1682; charming little canvas). — Artist unknown. La Bruyère.

Grand Cabinet (r. 143), where Racine's play, Esther, afterwards played at Saint-Cyr, was rehearsed before the king, and where Athalie (1702) was acted by the princes and princesses of the court. — Rigaud (after). The Grand Dauphin. — Mignard. The Duchess du Maine as a child (of the Condé family; married at Versailles to the Duke du Maine, son of Louis XIV and Mme de Montespan; she is blowing soap bubbles). — H. Rigaud. The Marquis de Dangeau. — Mignard (after). His daughter, Catherine Mignard. — J.-B. de la Rose. Visit to the arsenal at Marseilles. — Artist unknown. The Duke du Maine. — Louis Silvestre. Louis XIV receiving the Prince de Saxe at Fontainebleau (1714). — Artist unknown. Jean Warin (sculptor and engraver in bronze). — Ant. Coypel. Louis XIV receiving the Persian emissaries in the Gallery of Mirrors (1715). — H. Rigaud. Boileau; the Princess Palatine (sister-in-law of Louis XIV and mother of the Regent). — Ferdinand Elle. Mme de Maintenon (her niece, married in 1690 to the Duke de Noailles, marshal of France, is by her side; in the background is the royal establishment of Saint-Cyr, whence this picture comes). — Ph. Vignon. Mlle de Blois and Mlle de Nantes (daughters of Louis XIV and Mme de Montespan; a negro is offering them flowers). — Vivien. The painter Jean Le Moyne; Fénelon. — Le Bouteux. The artist Rigaud.

Room 144 brings us back to the facade facing the park over the South garden beds. — Ant. Pezey. Louis XIV receiving the oath of Dangeau in the ancient chapel of Versailles (1695; this chapel, the predecessor of the present chapel, stood where is now the Salon d'Hercule, occupying first and ground floors). — Gilles Allou. The sculptor Coysevox. — H. Rigaud. The founder J. Jacques Keller and (forming pendant) his brother J. Balthasar Keller (it is to them that we owe the beautiful bronzes of the fountains in the park). — Artist unknown. Vauban. — H. Rigaud. Mignard. — Artist unknown. Racine. — F. de Troy. Mansart — Largillière. The sculptor Jean Thierry. — Largillière. His portrait. — Carlo Maratta. Le Nôtre (celebrated designer of the Park of Versailles). — Mignard. Philippe d'Anjou (grandson of Louis XIV and later king of Spain). — Mignard. Colbert. — Artist unknown. Molière. — H. Rigaud. The sculptor Martin Desjardins. — Artist unknown. Louis XIV presiding over the Council of Justice (about 1670).

[To the right of this room, the Grande Salle des Gardes r. 140 where it was the custom for the kings to wash the feet of thirteen poor children on the eve of Good Friday. This vast room was completely disfigured under Louis-Philippe. Ceiling, by Callet : Allegory of the 18th Brumaire (the vessel of State, with France victorious, safely reaches port and is made fast with laurels). Paintings above the doors are by Gérard and were originally intented for the Louvre Courage, Genius, Generosity and Constance). On the walls, three immense pictures; Napoleon distributing the eagles on the Champ-de-Mars parade ground, December 5th 1804, by J.-L. David; Battle of Aboukir July 25th 1799, by Gros picture painted by request of Murat, who is seen leading the charge ; Centenary of the States General (inauguration by President Carnot of the restored Neptune fountain, May 5th 1889 , by Roll. In the middle of the room, Napoleon dying, marble, by Vela. Furniture in the Empire style. — From the Salle des Gardes, which opens on to the landing of the Marble Staircase and the Antechamber of the Queen, we return to the preceding room (141) and continue by the room 145, on the left of this last (angle of the South wing).]

Room 145 (on the left). — This room, first known as the Salon des Marchands (Merchants' room) was opened to merchants from the outer world, who held a bazaar here, selling to the inhabitants of the Palace : paper, books, dresses, perfumery, etc. Under Louis XVI it was used as a guard-room for the Cent Suisses (hundred Swiss guards) who slept here on mattresses. It has since been transformed into the Salle de 1792 (military pictures relating to this period of the Revolution; porcelain column from the Sèvres manufactory, presented to Napoleon I by the town of Paris).

Vestibule and Escalier des Princes (Princes' Staircase; r. 147). This staircase gave, as at present, access to the South Wing, formerly occupied by the Princes of the blood, whence its name. It dates from Louis XIV and was built by Mansart; it is of imposing appearance, although its panelled ceiling was unfortunately lowered by Louis-Philippe; fine bas-relief in stone, above the doors, and niches (children playing with helmets and arms). In a niche, the Three Graces, by Pradier. — Crossing the landing, we enter the Galerie des Batailles.

Galerie des Batailles (Gallery of Battles, r. 148) occupies the whole of the first floor of the Aile du Midi (South Wing), and was built by Mansart from 1679 to 1882. The ancient apartments were demolished in order to make room for this vast gallery, which, in the reign of Louis-Philippe, was the admiration of all. It is the work of the architects Fontaine and Nepveu (1836) and measures 120 metres (131 $^1/_3$ yards) in length by 13 metres (14 $^1/_3$ yards) in breadth; its decoration is a last and rather poor reminiscence of the Empire style; in the centre it is ornamented by a group of pillars. — Numerous busts, the greater part without value, of celebrated warriors.

N. B. - In summer, this gallery is often used for magnificent exhibitions of Gobelins tapestries, when the pictures are hidden.

On the walls, a series of large pictures representing the principal battles of French history, few of which, however, are above the ordinary; the whole gallery is more a sort of gigantic pictorial record. The best pictures will be pointed out as we proceed. Commencing by the left the names of the battle and the artist appear beneath each picture, we are able to follow them in their chronological order. We begin by : — Ary Scheffer. Battle of Tolbiac. — Then follow : — (4th) Horace Vernet. Battle of Bouvines : — (5th) Delacroix. Battle of Taillebourg, where Saint Louis defeated Henri III of England, July 21st, 1242 (this picture is without equal in the collection and is one of the master-pieces of the artist). — (4th before the last) Gérard. Entry of Henry IV into Paris.

At the end of the gallery : — SALLE DE 1830 (1830 marks the date of the revolution which dethroned Charles X and put Louis-Philippe on the throne). (Mediocre ceiling by Picot, 1835, Truth protecting France). — Gérard. Louis-Philippe at the Hotel de Ville, July 31st, 1830 ; — Court. Louis-Philippe distributing his Standards to the Garde Nationale. — Modern pictures : Roll. Halt! : Gervex. Distribution of awards at the Exhibition of 1900.

We return, to the gallery and follow the opposite wall, — Deveria. Battle of Marseilles (October 4th, 1693 ; won by Catinat). — Horace Vernet. Fontenoy (May 11th, 1748, defeat of the English troops under Lord Hay). — Couder, Battle of Lawfeld (won by the Marshal de Saxe : he is seen on horseback before Louis XV, to whom is being brought an English general, prisoner). — Philippoteaux. Rivoli (Bonaparte has just had his horse shot under him). — Gérard. Austerlitz. — H. Vernet. Iéna ; Friedland ; Wagram (three of Napoleon's greatest victories).

Modern painting : Patrie (1870-71, War), by Bertrand.

[Behind the Galerie des Batailles is a Gallery of sculpture (seldom open) containing numerous casts.]

We re-descend by the Escalier des Princes (Princes' Staircase).

N. B. — If pressed for time, the visit to the Park (p. 67) can immediately begin from this spot; but Itinerary II of the Palace, which is not very long, is equally recommended. To continue the visit of the Palace, then, we take the Salles du XVIIIe Siècle (XVIII Century), entering by the door which faces the Escalier des Princes (Princes' Staircase) (See below : A).

ITINERARY II. — This itinerary, which we recommend, comprises the visit to the central rooms of the ground floor, or SALLES DU XVIIIe SIÈCLE (XVIII Century Rooms). To this can be added, if desired, the visit to the OPERA-HOUSE. Itinerary II can be followed on any day.

Commencement of the Itinerary :

A. — By the colonnaded Vestibule of the Cour des Princes (in the Cour des Princes or Princes' Courtyard. — Salle du Congrès, p. 63) which, opposite the Chapel, serves as a passage between the Cour des Princes and the park. There is a door on the right, under this vestibule, facing the Escalier des Princes (Princes' Staircase), beside a statue of Louis XIV in Roman costume, by Gilles Guerin (time of Louis XIV). We cross the first Vestibule and the ARCADE DU MIDI (r. 40-39: various statues; among them, Hoche, in Greek costume, by Milhomme, which originally stood on the Place Hoche in the town) and arrive at the Vestibule of the Escalier de Marbre (See below). On the left of this open, on the park side, the Salles du XVIIIe Siècle (XVIII Century).

B. — By the Cour Royale, where, on the left, a little before the Cour de Marbre (Marble Courtyard) is the vestibule of the Escalier de Marbre (Marble Staircase) (at the foot of this staircase, fine bust of Louis XIV, by Warin, and various other busts of : Mansart, by J.-L. Moyne; Mignard, by Desjardins; Le Brun, by Coysevox). Opposite, we enter the Salles du XVIIIe Siècle, facing on to the park.

Salles du XVIIIe Siècle (XVIII Century) (r. 42 to 54). — These rooms took the place of older apartments, occupied successively by Mme de Montespan, by the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XIV, by the Regent, by the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XV, by Marie Josephe de Saxe, widow of the Marshal, by Mme de Pompadour, by the daughters of Louis XV and by the Count de Provence, brother of Louis XVI, afterwards crowned Louis XVIII. As may be imagined, the rooms were often altered and reconstructed, but still a few rare vestiges of Louis XIV's time remain; their admirable decorations were entirely of the time of Louis XV, unfortunately completely destroyed by Louis-Philippe to make way for pictures of practically no interest. What has been saved has been restored. A collection of portraits of the XVIII century to-day adorns these rooms.

Room 42 (Opening on to the Vestibule de Marbre). — H. Rigaud. The Regent Philippe II d'Orléans, nephew of Louis XVI; he governed during the minority of Louis XV). — Nattier (after; Peter the Great,

Emperor of Russia. — Largillière. Vauban. — H. Rigaud. Louis XV as a child (charming portrait of one destined to become so bad a king). — H. Rigaud. Count de Toulouse (son of Louis XIV and Mme de Montespan). — Santerre. Philippe d'Orléans. — Gobert. Princess de Conty. Largillière (after). The painter Largillière and his family.

Room 43. — Magnificent clock. Louis XV style (the sun lighting the world). — On the chimney-piece, bust of Nicolas Coustou, by Nogaret (after William Coustou, his brother). — Belle. The Infanta of Spain; Louis XV and the Infanta of Spain (his fiancée; came as a child to Versailles, but sent away a few years later). — Duménil.

Meeting of Parliament under Louis XV (12th Sept. 1715). — Galloche. Fontenelle. — P. D. Martin. Departure of Louis XIV from the Sainte Chapelle after the meeting of Parliament. — Belle. Marie Leczinska (wife of Louis XV). — J. B. Van Loo and Ch. Parrocel. Louis XV. — J. B. Van Loo. Marie Leczinska. — De Troy, The painter Belle. — P. D. Martin. Coronation of Louis XV at Rheims (26th Oct. 1722). — French School. Council of the Regency (minority of Louis XV). — A. Robert. Review of the Musketeers. — School of De Troy. Voltaire in his youth. — Artist unknown. Coronation banquet of Louis XV.

Room 44. — L. M. Van Loo. Philip V and the royal family of Spain (sketch of the Madrid painting). — Belle. Marie Leczinska and the Dauphin. — Belle. Philip V (king of Spain, grandson of Louis XIV). — Belle (after). The Infanta and Mme Henriette (daughters of Louis XV). — J. Raoux. Mme Boucher d'Orsay (beside the altar of Love). — Ch. Parrocel. Arrival at the Tuileries of the Turkish ambassador. — Aved. Saïd Pacha. — Belle (after). Mme Adelaïde as a child (daughter of Louis XV). — Rigaud (after) Hercule, Cardinal de Fleury. — H. Rigaud. Louis XV (1730).

Room 45. — It is in this room that were born (of Marie Josephe de Saxe, second wife of the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XV) Louis XVI. Louis XVIII and Charles X; this was also the room occupied by Marie-Antoinette, Dauphine, when she came to France to marry XVI. — Artist unknown. Ange Gabriel (architect of Versailles and of the Petit Trianon, in the reign of Louis XV). — Aved. The poet J. Baptiste Rousseau. — Tocqué. Marquis de Matignon. — Portail. Château de Bellevue (drawing). — Roslin. Choiseul. — Artist unknown. The painter De Troy. — Portail. Château de la Celle-Saint-Cloud (drawing). — L. M. Van Loo. Choiseul (no ressemblance whatever to the proceding portrait of the same). — Lajoue. Portrait of the artist, with his family. — Tocqué. The poet Gresset. — L. M. Van Loo. Carle Van Loo and his family. — Fine Louis XV clock.

Room 46. — In the time of Louis XIV this room was joined to the following and formed the bed-room of the Grand Dauphin; later it became the Regent's sleeping room, then that of the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XV, when he married his second wife, Marie Josephe de Saxe (with his first wife, Marie Therese of Spain, he occupied the South Wing). The original room was divided into two, and this room became the Cabinet of the Dauphine, his wife. Of it there remain only the cornice and a few sculptured pannels. Nattier. Prince de Turenne. — Nattier. Mme Adelaïde (in 1756: she holds a distaff; charming portrait). — Nattier. Mme de Pompadour. — Tocqué. A. F. Poisson, Marquis de Marigny (brother of Mme de Pompadour). — Nattier. Marie Josephe de Saxe (daughter of the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XV). — Tocqué. Lenormant de Tournehem (Director of the King's Buildings, under Louis XV). — Roslin. The painter Boucher. — Nattier. Marie Leczinska (in 1748). — Roslin. Cochin the engraver.

Room 47. — This became the music room or library of the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XV, at the time of the modifications mentioned above. It still possesses part of its charming sculptured decorations, restored within our own time (on the frise, children playing instruments; in medallions, angels playing organ and violin).—Nivelon. Marie-Josephe de Saxe.

Cl. Hachette.

Louis XV by J. B. Van Loo.

Room 48. — Large corner room with six windows (the visitor is now above the Salon de la Paix), formerly Cabinet du Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XIV, and of the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XV; it was also occupied by Louis XVI when a young man. Of the decoration by Vanberckt only débris remain, with a few specimens of worked copper. — Nattier. Portraits of the daughters of Louis XV (Mmes Victoire, Elisabeth, Adelaïde, Sophie, Louise, Henriette), in beautiful antique frames. — Interesting busts on elegant marble pedestals : Houdon. Voltaire; J. B. Le Moyne, Fontenelle; Francin, d'Alembert; Houdon, Diderot. — On the exterior, handsome gilded balcony in wrought iron, Louis XIV period. Fine view over the park, lakes, etc.

Room 49. — After having been inhabited by the Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XIV, this room became the Regent's study; here he was struck down by apoplexy on December 2nd 1723, in the presence of the Duchess of Falari. The Grand Dauphin, son of Louis XV used it as a bed-room after 1717 (See above, r. 16). Fine decorative details can still be seen; gilded doors, windows, angle-panels, ceiling frise (four mythological sketches; in the angles, gilded cocks with outstretched wings), frame of mirror sculptured by Verberckt (two other mirrors ornamented the side walls; at the end of the room stood the Dauphin's bed, behind a balustrade); admirable chimney-piece of red marble, decorated with gilded bronze work (on the side-pieces, charming figures of Flora and Zephyr, by Jacques Caffieri). — Above the chimney-piece, Gobelins tapestry after the Louis XV painted by Carle Van Loo. — Natoire. Louis XV. — Drouais. Louis XVIII as a child. — L. M. Van Loo. Duc de La Vrillière. — Nattier. The Infanta Marie-Isa- belle (Grand-daughter of Louis XV). — Nattier. Mme Adelaïde (as Diana). Mme Henriette (as Flora; two charming pictures). — Nattier. Mme Louise (in an oval).

Room 50. — Ancient Antechamber, with frame-work of the doors and windows of the time of Louis XIV; cornice of sculptured stone (children on lions; animals), by Rousseau (transition of Louis XIV to Louis XV style). — Olivier. Fête at the Isle Adam. — Roslin. The Abbé Terray. — Ducreux (after). Marie-Antoinette in her youth. — Gauthier-Dagoty. Mme du Barry. — Olivier. Supper of the Prince de Conty, at the Temple. — Joseph Vernet. Hunting in the marshes near Naples. — Frédou. Louis-Joseph-Xavier de France (grandson of Louis XV; brother of Louis XVI; died at the age of ten), pastel. — Drouais, Mme Elisabeth as a child (sister of Louis XVI). — Drouais the younger. Mme Sophie (in 1763). — Olivier. Hunt at the Isle Adam. — Artist unknown. The Chancellor Maupeou. — Natoire. Marie-Josephe de Saxe. — Casanova. Embassy at Constantinople. — Artist unknown. Philippe d'Orléans. — L. M. Van Loo. Charles X as a young man (1770). — Drouais. The Comte d'Artois (later Charles X) and Mme Clotilde (his sister) as children (the little girl is on a goat; charming picture, reminiscent of the pictured shepherdesses). — L. M. Van Loo. Louis XVI in his youth (1769). — L. M. Van Loo. Louis XVIII in his youth.

Room 51. — Or Galerie Basse (Low Gallery) in the centre of the building (beneath the Galerie des Glaces). — In the time of Louis XIV, this was an open passage with a gate at each end connecting the Cour de Marbre (Marble Court), which can be seen on the right, with the park; the red pillars are of the same period. For entertainments two moveable scenic canvases were hung here, one for occasions when they were musical and the other for plays. This was the only theatre where Molière played at Versailles, and where he gave, among others, the Ecole des Maris, the Fâcheux, the Impromptu de Versailles and the first three acts, for the first time, of Tartuffe (May 14th, 1664.) This gallery was disfigured when it was rearranged for Marie-Antoinette, who had constructed here a small private apartment, on one side overlooking the park, and on the other the Cour de Marbre. The partitions then erected have been removed. — Carle Van Loo, Louis XV (in 1751). — Cosette, Louis XV (in 1763). — Interesting series of the battles of Louis XV (Fontarabie, Menin, Fribourg, Tournay, Fontenoy, Lawfeld), by Martin and Leufant (fine frames, carved tops). — Statues : Coysevox, Duchess de Bourgogne (mother of Louis XV); Guillaume Coustou, Marie Leczinska. Other statues : Pajou, Turenne ; Roland, Condé ; Houdon, Tourville ; Mouchy, Luxembourg.

We continue by the rooms overlooking the park.

Room 52. — Here begin the ancient Appartements des Bains (Bath-rooms); under Louis XIV; occupied by Mme de Montespan, from 1685 to 1691, then by her legitimatised sons. Under Louis XV, it was occupied by Mme de Pompadour and Mmes Sophie and Victoire; under Louis XVI, by Mme Adelaïde, sistor of the King. This room in Louis XVI's time, was called the Cabinet des Bains and contained several marble baths and one large circular basin, which has unfortunately been lost, large enough for two people to bathe at a time. During later transformations the room was made into an antechamber. — Duplessis. Comte d'Angiviller (Director of the royal buildings under Louis XVI). — Mme Filleul. Children of the Count d'Artois (later Charles X). Artist unknown. Louis-Philippe d'Orléans (Philippe-Egalité.

father of King Louis-Philippe; he voted for the death of Louis XVI, but was none the less himself beheaded in 1793). — Callet. Louis XVI. — Roslin. The Sculptor Pierre Julien. — Hubert Robert. The gardens of Versailles in 1775 (entrance to the Lawn and Apollo fountain; at this time a general remoddling of the park took place). — Pajou. Marie-Antoinette (in 1774; marble medallion; here we see the Queen less flattered than in the pictures by Mme Vigée Le Brun, with her rather prominent eyes, in all the reality of her true physiognomy). — Houdon. Comte de Valbelle (bust).

Room 53. — Chambre des Bains, under Louis XIV; of the decorations of the period now only remain the carved panels of the shutters (fish and reeds). — Duplessis. Louis XVI. — Duplessis (after). Gluck. — Mme Labille-Guiard. Mme Infanta (daughter of Louis XV, old, in 1788; with a parrot). — Schillin. The Duc d'Enghien as a child. — Mme Vigée Le Brun. The Dauphin and Madame Royale (in 1784; this is the first Dauphin, who died in 1789, on the eve the Revolution, and the future Duchess d'Angoulême, who died at Frohsdorff, in 1851; seated on a grassy bank, they are holding a birds' nest). — Ducreux. Portrait of himself. Mme Vigée Le Brun. Marie-Antoinette and her children (in 1787; the queen is wearing a toque and a red dress; on her knees, the Duc de Normandie, aged two, who died in the Temple prison, in 1795; near her, Madame Royale and the first Dauphin, See above; celebrated picture, painted at Versailles). — Cozette (after Ducreux). Joseph II (Emperor of Austria; brother of Marie Antoinette; oval portrait in tapestry). — Mme Vigée Le Brun. Mme Elisabeth (sister of Louis XVI). Marie-Antoinette with a rose (one of the most popular portraits of this queen). — J. Bailly. The painter Clément Belle. — Callet. Louis Philippe d'Orléans (Philippe-Égalité). — Mme Vigée Le Brun. Grétry. — Mme Vigée Le Brun. Marie-Antoinette.

Room 54. — Corner room, with six windows (beneath the Salon de la Guerre), which begins the return, facing the gardens on the North, the Allée d'Eau and the Neptune fountain. Of its decorations by Verberckt (about 1763), for the daughters of Louis XV, there are still a few interesting details left (doors, shutters, panels and cornice). — Mme Vigée Le Brun. Duchesse d'Orléans (wife of Philippe Égalité). — Mme Labille-Guiard. Mme Victoire (daughter of Louis XV, old, in 1788). — Artist unknown. Princesse de Lamballe (curious coiffure). — Boze. The Duc de Berry, as a child (second son of Charles X; assassinated by Louvel, in 1820). — Mme Labille-Guiard. Mme Adelaïde (daughter of Louis XV, old, in 1787). — Mme Elleul. The Duc d'Angoulême (first son of Charles X). Between the windows, six sculptured vases, on fine pedestals.

[The rooms which follow, overlooking the northern gardens, are at present closed to the public. — We retrace our steps along the Galerie Basse to the central vestibule, which overlooks the Cour de Marbre.]

From the central vestibule (r. 32) one can proceed, to the right, by the rooms 33 (pictures and historical portraits) 34, 35 and 36 (curious pictures of the Royal Palaces, one of Versailles in the days of Louis XIV, by J.-B. Martin, P.-D. Martin and Allegrain) and by the Vestibule de Marbre. — On the left, exit by the rooms 30 (various pictures, often changed), 29, 28, 27 (angle of the Cour de Marbre and the Cour Royale; Louis XV, leaving this room to get into his carriage, was struck by Damien with a knife, January 5th, 1757, at six o'clock in the evening), then by the room 26 (busts and statues of the time of Louis-Philippe, for the most part without interest), and, on turning to the left, by the ARCADE DU NORD (r. 25 to 22; casts) and the passage of the Chapel.

At this point of the itinerary, one can either proceed to the park or visit the Opera-house.

The Opera-house is reached by the lower Vestibule of the Chapel (p. 24), where one can take either the Picture Gallery of the History of France, overlooking the park (p. 57) or the Galerie de Sculpture (p. 57; the rooms containing the pictures of the Crusades and the Crimean War are on the right, p. 58 and 60). Either leads to the Opera-house (a guardian of the Senate, to which the Opera belongs, conducts visitors in parties; small gratuity general). — The Opera-house was constructed under Louis XV by the architect Gabriel, from 1753 to 1770, the palace possessing before that time only small, insignificant stages, quite unsuited for dramatic performances of any importance. On October 1st 1789 a banquet, known as the Banquet of the King's Body-guard, was held here, when Marie-Antoinette and Louis XVI were loudly acclaimed by all present. Extravagant speeches and exalted expressions of loyalty were voiced: repeated in Paris a few days later they caused the mob to march on Versailles to bring their king back within the capital. Following the War of 1870-71, the Assemblée Nationale held its meetings in the Opera-house, specially arranged for this purpose. From 1875 to 1879 it was here the Senate sat.

The body of the building, entirely constructed of wood, was formerly painted in imitation green marble and pale grey; it was Louis-Philippe who had it daubed with red paint. The pit is filled with the senators' benches; the tribune, in Empire style, comes from Saint-Cloud and figured in the famous day of the 18th Brumaire, the date of Napoleon I's coup d'état. Fine bas-reliefs of the XVIII century in carved wood, gilded, representing the twelve gods, beneath the balcony; Corinthian columns separate the boxes and the upper galleries. The ceiling with skylights was fixed in position in 1871. — From the body of the building we pass to the Foyer, which has preserved its interesting carved decorations of the XVIII century, the work of Pajou. Between the windows, bas-relief of Venus and cupids, where we see Mme de Pompadour. — Generally one leaves the Foyer by the staircase leading to the North wing, whence it is possible either to redescend to the ground-floor or ascend to the Attique du Nord (Nothern top floor) (p. 61).

ITINERARY III. — This itinerary, as well as the following, includes the HISTORICAL MUSEUM properly speaking (pictures, portraits and sculpture); a part of the rooms composing it are open every day, the others alternately on different days of the week. Itinerary III includes the rooms of the North Wing (Aile du Nord). — The HISTORICAL MUSEUM was formed under Louis-Philippe when he dedicated Versailles « A toutes les gloires de la France ». (To the Great Glory of France).

Its value is of an unequal character; it contains a great number of ancient pictures, which form the most interesting part; other pictures, retrospective, painted by order of Louis-Philippe, are mediocre. The historical museum has been kept up since its inauguration, and contains a great choice of documents relating to Louis-Philippe, the Second Empire and the Third (present) Republic. Attached to it is a collection of casts and some original sculpture.

Aile du Nord (North Wing) (Thursdays and Sundays for the CRUSADES gallery, ground-floor; every day for the ROOMS OF AFRICA, ITALY AND THE CRIMEAN WARS, first floor; Tuesdays and Fridays for the portrait gallery in the ATTIQUE DU NORD, second floor). – This itinerary commences by the Vestibule on the ground-floor of the Chapel.

GROUND-FLOOR. - On to the vestibule of the Chapel (p. 24) open eleven rooms (open every day) (r. 2 to 19) overlooking the park, and form the 1re Galerie de l'Histoire de France (first Gallery of the History of France). The pictures are for the most part without great historic or artistic value. Their subjects range from Charlemagne to Louis XVI (r. 12); each one bears an inscription. Among them are also a few ancient pictures. We indicate the principal works.

ROOM 2. — P. Delaroche. Charlemagne crossing the Alps.

ROOM 3. — Vinchon. Crowning of Charles VII at Rheims.

ROOM 4. — Cabanel. Glorification of Saint-Louis.

ROOM 5. — Ary Scheffer. Death of Gaston de Foix.

ROOM 6. — (Reign of Henri IV). — Above the doors : Dévéria. Siege of Metz; Combat of Fontaines-Françaises.

ROOM 7. — (Reign of Louis XIV). — Philippe de Champaigne (after). Louis XIV naming his brother a knight of Saint-Louis. — 6 ancient panels (sieges and battles), interesting, by J.-B. Martin and by, or after, Van der Meulen.

ROOM 8. — (Reign of Louis XIV). — Suite of pictures by J.-B. Martin and by, or after, Van der Meulen.

ROOM 9. — (Reign of Louis XIV). — Isabey. Naval combat of Texel (Jean Bart against the Dutch fleet). — Van der Meulen. Fall of Cambrai; Capture of Charleroi. — J. Parrocel. Battle of Leuze.

ROOM 10. — (Reign of Louis XIV). – Van der Meulen. Capture of Dôle.

ROOM 11. — (Reign of Louis XV). - Fine old pictures (sieges and battles) by J.-I.-F. Parrocel and Lenfant. - H. de la Pegna. Battle of Fontenoy (curious panorama).

ROOM 12. — (Reign of Louis XV and Louis XVI). — C. Roqueplan. Battle of Rocou. — Noel Halle. The Peace of 1763. – Hersent. Louis XVI succouring the poor.

At the end of the rooms, a staircase takes one to the Attique du Nord (p. 61; upper floor of the North wing).

Parallel to these rooms is the Ist Gallery of Sculpture, where in lines are tombs, busts and statues of the kings and queens of France and celebrated personages, from the Merovingians (Chapel Vestibule side) to Henri II and Catherine de Médicis. These are casts, for the most part very interesting, a great number taken from the originals at Saint-

Denis. Each bears an inscription and the name of the personage represented. — In the middle of this gallery open the Salles des Croisades (See below). At the far end of the gallery, entrance to the Opera-house (p. 56).

mediocre in Versailles, as much from the point of view of historical interest as from the artistic value of the canvases they contain. Their decoration is of the neo-gothic style, with gilded ceilings, armorial bearings and escutcheons of the kings, princes and knights who took part in the different crusades. The rooms also contain a few interesting old casts. Entrance by the door on the right.

Room 17. — Signol. Passage of the Bosphorus (1097); Capture of Jerusalem (1099).

Room 18. — Schnetz. Battle of Ascalon. — Signol. St-Bernard preaching at Vezelay, raising the troops for the second crusade (1146).

Room 21. — Grand central salon, overlooking the street, rue des Reservoirs. — Pictures: Delacroix (after). Entry of the Crusaders into Constantinople, in 1204 (this mediocre copy replaces the original, transferred to the Louvre); Blondel. Philippe-Auguste at Ptolemais; Odier. Turks raising the siege of Rhodes; Larivière. Raising of the siege of Malta; Horace Vernet. Battle of Las Navas; Schnetz. Procession around Constantinople. — In the centre of the room, casts of tombs, more or less restored, of the grand masters of Malta. — At the window in the middle, bronze mortar from the hospice of the knights of Saint John of Rhodes (given to Louis-Philippe in 1836 by the sultan Mahmoud). — Opposite, fine Gothic door, in cedar, from the hospice of the knights of Saint-John (part of same gift).

Room 20. — Rouget. St Louis at Ptolemais; Death of St Louis. — Guillon-Lethière. St Louis a prisoner.

Room 19. — Larivière. Battle of Ascalon. — Gallait. Baudouin crowned emperor of Constantinople.

Leaving the gallery of the Crusades, we return, by the left, to the Vestibule on the ground-floor of the Chapel and ascend the small staircase to the first floor.

First Floor. — Overlooking the park and beginning at the Vestibule of the first floor of the Chapel, are ten rooms (open every day) forming the 2e Galerie de l'Histoire de France (second Gallery of the History of France). They contain pictures whose subjects range from the Revolution to Louis-Philippe, who installed this gallery. Many of these pictures are without great value from either an artistic or documentary point of view; some, however, are interesting.

Room 81. — Colson. Entry of Bonaparte into Alexandria. — Battle of the Pyramids and other battles fought in Egypt (mediocre).

Room 85. Lebel. Napoleon at the hospice of Saint-Bernard. — Bacler d'Albe. Bivouac on the eve of Austerlitz.

Room 86. — J. B. Regnault. The Senate receiving the Standards captured from the Austrians (Juanary Ist, 1806; painted in 1808, this picture hung in the Senate). — Ponce Camus. Napoleon at the tomb of Frederick the Great (1806; at Potsdam); Napoleon at Osterode (1807).

Room 87. — Mediocre paintings of the history of the Empire.

Room 88. — Gautherot. Napoleon wounded at Ratisbon (1809). — Bellangé. Wagram. — Meynier. Napoleon on the island of Lobau.

Room 89. — Mediocre paintings of the history of the Empire.

Room 90. — To the right of the window : — H. Vernet (after). Napoleon bidding adieu to his followers at Fontainebleau (abdication of the Emperor; 6th April, 1814).

Room 91. — Gros. Louis XVIII hurriedly leaving the palace of the Tuileries (on receiving the news of the escaped Bonaparte's march on Paris on his return from Elba; March 20th, 1815). — Gérard (after). Louis XVIII (in his apartment at the Tuileries; 1814). — P. Delaroche. Capture of Trocadero (1823).

Room 92. — Gros. Charles X at the Review at Rheims. — Gérard. Coronation of Charles X. — H. Vernet. Review of the National Guard by Charles X (on the left, Louis-Philippe). — Statue of Chateaubriand, by Duret.

Room 93. — Scenes from the Revolution of 1830 and the accession of Louis-Philippe.

At the end of the rooms, a staircase mounts to the Attique du Nord (p. 61).

Parallel to these rooms runs the 2nd Gallery of Sculpture, containing interesting casts of tombs, busts and statues of kings and queens of France and celebrated persons (taken in part from Saint-Denis), with some original and mediocre statues, of the time of Louis-Philippe (all bear inscriptions; subjects go as far as the XVII century). — In the middle of the gallery open the rooms devoted to the pictures of the campaigns in Africa, the Crimea, Italy and Mexico (See below). — At the end of the gallery, door of the Opera-house (entrance on the ground-floor; p. 56).

The rooms of Africa, the Crimea, Italy and Mexico (open daily) occupy the place of ancient apartments, entirely destroyed. The present rooms were installed by Louis-Philippe and during the Second Empire. — Entrance by the door on the right.

Room 98. — Ed. Dubufe. Congress of Paris (1856; congress which met to settle the Eastern question). — Gérôme. Reception by Napoleon III of the ambassadors of Siam. — H. Vernet. Mac-Mahon at Magenta. — Winterhalter (after). The Empress Eugenie. — H. Flandrin. Napoleon III. — Hébert. Princesse Clotilde and (opposite) Prince Jérôme. — Muller. Opening of the Senate by the Emperor (1852). — Bonnat. Montalivet. — N. B. These pictures will eventually be transfered to the Attique du Midi (p. 64).

Room 99. — A. Yvon. Retreat from Russia (1812 : Marshal Ney supporting the rear guard). — Ginain. Return of the Army of Italy. — Gustave Doré. Battle of Inkermann (Crimea; November 5th. 1854).

Room 103. — Horace Vernet. Battle of Habrah (conquest of Algeria, December 3rd, 1835; the Duke of Orléans directing the attack); Siege of Constantine (1837; three large canvasses; the Duke of Nemours repulsing an attack by the Kabyles; the attacking columns preparing for the assault; capture of the town). — H. Vernet. Capture of the fort of Saint Jean d'Ulloa (1838; Mexico; the Prince de Joinville is standing on the poop of the vessel); Occupation of the pass of Mouzaia (Algeria; 1840; the Duke of Orleans is on horseback, the Duke d'Aumale on foot); Attack of the Citadel of Antwerp (Belgium; 1832). — These huge canvases painted by Horace, Vernet, which figure for the sum of Fr. 843.000 in the orders given to the artist by Louis-Philippe, are not above the average as specimens of his work; they display, however, a certain picturesqueness. They are of great value, nevertheless, as documentary records of the persons and military costumes of the time.

Room 104. — (On the right of the preceding; two small Cabinets lead to it; in one is a curious English clock of the XVIII century; in the other, bas-relief in plaster, by Carpeaux, Napoleon III setting free Abd-el-Kader). — In the cyma (right panel): 12 gouaches by Siméon Fort, incidents of the War in Algeria (these small pictures are very charmingly painted, and much superior to the great canvases by Vernet). — Philippoteaux. Battle of Mazagran; Capture of Medeah. — Chassériau. Ali-ben-Hamet (fine painting). — Horace Vernet. Battle of Isly (10 m. by 5 m. 11 yards by 5 1/3; colonel Yusuf presenting to Marshal Bugeaud the standards and parasol of the opposing commander, captured from the camp of the son of the emperor of Morococo, 1844); Taking of the Smalah of Abd-el-Kader. — (1843; towards the left, the Duke d'Aumale, on horseback, commanding the Chasseurs d'Afrique; towards the right, Arab camp being dispersed, from which Abd el Kader is absent. This immense canvass, 21 m. by 5 (23 yards by 5 1/3) was painted at Versailles in the Jeu de Paume; it is more of a panorama than a picture. The deatils are picturesque and amusing to note, but the colour is somewhat flat and yellow; the figures look very much like theatrical supernumeraries playing a well rehearsed play). — Tissier. The Prince President (Napoleon III) setting free Abd-el-Kader.

We return to room 103, which is crossed to reach room 102.

Room 102. — In the cima, all around the room, interesting series of 21 small pictures by Durand-Brager, incidents of the siege of Sebastopol (October 1854 to September 1855; these pictures are greatly superior to the huge canvases already noted). — Barrias. Landing of the French army in the Crimea (1854). — Ad. Yvon. The gorge of Malakoff (1855; on the right, General Vinoy); Capture of the Malakoff fort (General MacMahon planting his sword on the conquered ground; General Bosquet, wounded, is carried away on a stretcher; on the left, in the background, the French flag flying over the Malakoff). — The other pictures, by Yvon, represent the battles of Solferino and Magenta (Italian campaign).

We return to room 103, which is followed by rooms 101 and 100.

Room 101. — H. Vernet. Louis-Philippe inaugurating the new Versailles (surrounded by princes of the royal family, the king is on horseback, before the gilded gate of the Place d'Armes). — Couder. Bonaparte, First Consul, installs the State Council at the Luxembourg; Oath of the Jeu de Paume; Federation fête on the Champs de Mars; Louis XVIII proclaiming the Constitutional Charter (1814).

Room 102. — Vinchon. Enrolling volunteers in 1792. — Eugene Lami. Battle of Hondschoote; Wattignies. — Muller. Reading the death warrants of the last victims of the Terror (in the centre, André Chénier, the poet).

Leaving the galleries of Africa and the Crimea, we turn to the right to the Staircase (built in 1851) leading to the Attique du Nord.

Attique du Nord (Second floor). — Can be reached either from the ground-floor or the first floor by a staircase at the extremity of the Picture galleries of the Aile du Nord (North Wing).

This floor, divided into seven rooms, contains a most interesting collection of authentic historical portraits, collected mostly by Louis Philippe, and added to in recent years. The pictures range from the XV to the XVII centuries; most are unsigned.

the Madona and St. Michael (this precious relic, contemporaneous with the heroïne of France, and which represents her with the halo of a saint, unfortunately does not show her features). — Charles VI. — Philip the Bold. — Jean Sans Peur. — Curious Hunting scene of the Court of Jean Sans Peur (interesting white costumes). — Dosso-Dossi (after). Charles the Temeraire. — Charles VIII.

Next follows the XVI century : — Bonivet. — Henri III. — Diane de Poitiers. — Guillaume Budé, master of the king's library. — Maximilien II, Emperor of Germany. On the chimney-piece, bust of Francis Ier (cast). — Marie Tudor. — Charles IX. — Catherine de Médicis. — Henri III. — Anne, Duke of Montmorency. — Ball at Venice. — Henri IV, at the age of four (1557). — Reception of Henri III in Venice.

Room 154. — Continuation of the XVI century. — Henri IV (numerous portraits). — Henri IV at the Battle of Arques. — Gabrielle d'Estrées, as a child. — Henri I, Duke of Montmorency (in a suit of magnificent black armour). — Curious Procession of the League (in 1593: monks armed and wearing helmets). — Martin Ruze, grand master of the mines of France. — Marie de Médicis (wife of Henri IV, mother of Louis XIII). — Arbitrage of Henri IV between the Spaniards and the Dutch. — Ch. de Condé and his son. — Jean II of Bavaria and Beatrix de Bade.

Room 155. — Continuation of the XIV century : — Royal families of Spain and Austria (Philip II; the Infant Don Carlos; Philippe III). — Bust of Charles Quint. — Woman unknown (pretty portrait).

Room 156. — Commencement of the XVII century : — Woman unknown (curious costume). — Anne of Austria (wife of Louis XIII, mother of Louis XIV). — Porbus. Marie de Medicis. — Gaston de Foix, Duke of Orleans. — Marillac, keeper of the seals. — The Prevost of the Merchants and Aldermen of Paris (1612). — Marie de Rohan-Montbazon, Duchess of Chevreuse (1627; dressed as Diana, with a deer). — Anne of Austria. — Van Dyck. Thomas of Savoy, Prince of Carignan. — Etienne d'Aligre, Chancellor of France.

Room 157. — XVII century : — Curious picture-plans of sieges and capture of towns, under Louis XIII : Ile de Ré (1627); La Rochelle (1628); the Pas-de-Suze (1629) Privas, Nîmes, Montauban (1629). — Among the portraits : — The savant Peiresc. — Philippe de Champaigne. Richelieu. — The poet Voiture.

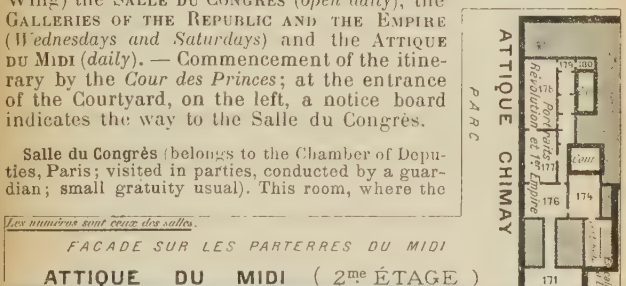
Room 158. — More picture-plans. — Velasquez (after). Philippe V, king of Spain. — Simon Vouet. Louis XIII (he is in armour; on their kness before him, France and Navarre, which he is protecting with his mantle). — Elisabeth of France, queen of Spain (daughter of Henri IV of Spain).

Room 159. — Françoise de Souvré, governess of the royal children of France (standing, dressed in black, with the two sons of Louis XIII : the Dauphin, future Louis XIV, with a cap bearing a blue plume; his brother, Philippe of Orléans, bare-headed). — Anne of Austria praying to St. Benoit and Ste. Scholastique. — Gaston d'Orléans (brother of Louis XIII). — Anne of Austria and her children (Louis XIV, a plume, on his head, and Philippe of Orléans, in white). — Paris about 1635 (view of the Pont-Neuf, with the ancient statue of Henri IV; on the left, the old Louvre; on the right, the Nesles Tower). — Louis XIV and his nurse (dame Longuet de la Giraudière, first nurse of Louis XIV). — The sculptor Simon Guillain. — Peter Lely. Henriette-Marie de France, queen of England (daughter of Henri IV; wife of Charles I of England, who was beheaded in 1649; two portraits). — Gaspard de Crayer. Cromwell. — The painter Sebastian Bourdon.

ITINERARY IV. — This itinerary includes (Aile du Midi; South Wing) the Salle du Congrès (open daily), the Galleries of the Republic and the Empire (Wednesdays and Saturdays) and the Attique du Midi (daily). — Commencement of the itinerary by the Cour des Princes; at the entrance of the Courtyard, on the left, a notice board indicates the way to the Salle du Congrès.



Salle du Congrès (belongs to the Chamber of Deputies, Paris; visited in parties, conducted by a guardian; small gratuity usual). This room, where the two Chambers meet to-day for the election of the President of the Republic, was built in 1875 in a part of the South wing formerly occupied by the administration of the Palace, to accommodate the Chamber of Deputies; the latter sat here until 1879 (See History, p. 20). The neighbouring buildings were at the same time greatly altered and disfigured for the purposes of the different services. — The hall where the meetings take place is semicircular and colonnaded; ceiling by Rubé and Chaperon (War, Agriculture, Commerce, Industry, Peace); at the end of the hall, above the Tribune, huge picture of the Opening of the States General in 1789, by Couder; on the right and left, ancient Gobelins tapestries, after Le Brun (Royal dwellings). On the desks, white slips of paper indicate the seats where Gambetta, Thiers, Felix Faure and Carnot sat. — In the side rooms of the Salle du Congrès, those interested in works of art can ask to be shown (tip) the remarkable tomb of Diane de Poitiers (Renaissance) from the Chateau of Annet.

The Cour des Princes (Princes' Courtyard) leads to the Vestibule des Princes, forming a passage to the park. On the left, under this vestibule, we enter the ground-floor of the Aile du Midi (South Wing).

GROUND-FLOOR. — Into the ground-floor open, overlooking the park above the Orangerie, the Salles de la République and l'Empire. These rooms (decorations of the time of Louis-Philippe) 11 in number (r. 67 to 80) (not all open to the public) contain pictures commemorating principal events in French history from 1796 to 1810. Each picture bears the name of the painter and its subject; the principal works are those by Gros, Girodet-Trieson, Thevenin, Drolling, Horace and Charles Vernet. — In the centre of the rooms, VESTIBULE NAPOLÉON (r. 73): Voltaire, by Houdon (cast); The Empress Joséphine, by Vital-Dubray; Washington, by Houdon (bronze). — Room 80, known as the SALLE DE MARENGO, terminates the Aile du Midi or South Wing. — We return by the same rooms, or by (rarely open, however) a GALERIE DE SCULPTURE (busts, statues and casts), which, parallel with these rooms, leads back to the entrance vestibule.

FIRST FLOOR. — The first floor of the Aile du Midi (South Wing) is occupied by the Galerie des Batailles (p. 49) reached by the Escalier des Princes (Princes' Staircase).

ATTIQUE DU MIDI (2nd floor of the South Wing, open every day). — The 2nd floor of the Aile du Midi has no direct communication with the first and ground-floors of the same wing. It is reached by the Escalier de Marbre (Marble Staircase) (on the left of the Cour Royale which is continued by the Escalier de Stuc (Stucco Staircase) of a somewhat mixed style, built by Louis-Philippe. — At the top of this staircase, (statue of Bonaparte when a scholar at the military school of Brienne, by L. Rochet, open: on the right, the rooms known as the Salles de l'Attique de Chimay; on the left, those of the Attique du Midi, properly speaking.

The Attique de Chimay consists of ten rooms (r. 174 and 176 to 184 and contains interesting portraits and various documents, periods of the Revolution and the Empire, among which: — ROOM 174. Moreau the younger, Assembly of Nobles at Versailles (1787); above, first portrait of Bonaparte in 1785; Taking of the Bastille; Bounieu, Mirabeau (pastel); David, Barère de Vieuzac; portrait of Robespierre (pencil); Hubert-Robert, Fête of the Federation on the Champ de Mars (14th July 1790; first anniversary of the taking of the Bastille); Gros, His portrait; Houdon, Buste of Lafayette; Kocharsky, Marie-Antoinette in the Temple prison, in her widow's mourning clothes; Heinsius, Mme Roland; Hauer, Charlotte Corday (who journeyed from Caen to Paris and stabbed the Jacobin tyrant Marat in his bath; this picture was drawn from life, at the Revolutionary Tribunal, by the artist, who was then an officer of the National Guard); David, Marat dead (picture and study in pen and ink). — ROOM 176. Gros, Bonaparte at Arcole; David, Bonaparte; Mme Morin, Mme Recamier; Mme Ducrest, Mme de Genlis. — ROOM 177. Battles of the Revolution and the Empire, by General

Lejeune. — Room 178. Portraits of Napoleon's family (Napoleon, Mme Mère, Marie-Louise, the King of Rome, Joséphine, Murat), mostly by Gerard and Gros. — Rooms 179 and 180. More of Napoléon's family. — Rooms 181 and 182. Sketches by Gérard and David. — Room 183. David. Pope Pius VII; Isabey, Napoléon and Josephine at Rouen and Jouy. — Room 184. Napoleon's generals.

The Attique du Midi contains : — Room 171. Gros. Napoléon decorating the artists at the Salon of 1810 (sketch). — E. B. Garnier. Marriage of Napoleon and Marie-Louise. — Portraits of the time of the Empire.

Room 170. — Robert Lefèvre. Napoleon, Emperor. — Guérin (after Gerard). Marie Louise. — Portraits of the time of the Empire.

Room 169. — Water-colours and portraits of the time of the Restoration. — Charles X, Duke and Duchess of Angouleme, Duke and Duchess de Berry, by Gérard, Gros and Kinson. — Lawrence. The painter Gérard. — Girodet-Trioson. Chateaubriand. — Kraft. The Duc de Reichstadt (the son of Napoleon I, who died at the age of 21 in what was practically captivity at Vienna, 1832).

Room 168. — This forms a long gallery containing important portraits and pictures of incidents of the Restoration, of the time of Louis-Philippe and the Third Empire. The most noteworthy are : — the portraits by Winterhalter (Duchess and Prince de Saxe Cobourg; Queen Victoria in 1842; Louis-Philippe and the queen Marie-Amélie, his wife; the Empress Eugénie (copy): — those by Ingres (the Duke of Orléans) and Flandrin (Napoleon III ; — those by Ary Scheffer and Horace Vernet (Baron and Baroness de Barante; the danseuse Taglioni: Gounod, the composer of Faust and other operas; Armand Carrel). — Among the other pictures : Andrieux, Reading over a play at the Comedie Française; Isabey, the Return to France of the ashes of Napoléon (brought from Saint Helena).

Of especial interest to English visitors is the small room at the end of this gallery, containing pictures relating to the visits of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert to France.

Beginning on the left and working round : Arrival of Queen Victoria at the Chateau d'Eu (3rd Sept. 1843) by Eugene Lami. — Arrival of Queen Victoria at Tréport (2nd Sept. 1843), E. Lami. — Portraits of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, by Winterhalter, on each side of a picture, by E. Isabey, of Louis-Philippe conducting Queen Victoria in his state barge to the royal yacht at Le Tréport (7th Sept. 1843). — Count de Granville, English Ambassador at the Court of France. — Landing of Louis-Philippe at Portsmouth (8th Oct. 1844), E. Isabey. — Arrival of Louis Philippe at Windsor Castle (8th Oct. 1844), Pingret. — A. de Lamartine, by Ary Scheffer. — Queen Victoria conferring the Order of the Garter on Louis-Philippe. — Louis-Philippe, Winterhalter. — Queen Victoria visiting the French fleet, received on board the « Gomer » (15th Oct. 1844), Biard. — Louis Philippe and Queen Victoria riding near the Chateau d'Eu (4th Sept. 1843), by Lami and Marilhat. — Louis-Philippe and Queen Victoria on board the « Victoria and Albert » (2nd Sept. 1843), Biard. — Duchess of Kent, Winterhalter. — Louis-Philippe leaving Le Tréport after visiting Queen Victoria on board the « Victoria and Albert » (2nd Sept. 1843), Meyer and Morel Fatio. — Queen Victoria at Le Tréport (3rd Sept. 1843), S. Fort.

THE PARK

The Park is open from morning till night; in summer until 10 p. m. The bosquets, or groves, surrounded by railings are closed from November 1st to April 30th; some are also closed during summer, but to visit any of them it is only necessary to apply at the Poste des Gardiens (Keepers' Lodge), at the left of the Tapis Vert, or Lawn (small gratuity usual).

The Park, or more accurately the Gardens of Versailles, is the work of Le Nôtre (1613-1708), the celebrated master of the art of garden designing, who laid them out for Louis XIV.

History. — The gardens were first traced out in 1661 : the last of the work on them was terminated about 1668. The same sculptors who had collaborated in the embellishment of the Palace employed their talents in beautifying the gardens, under the general direction of Le Brun. Mansart also did his part in the architectural construction, with the Orangerie and the Colonnade. The preliminary work of levelling and marking out the ground was prodigious; thousands of trees had to be brought here from all parts.

The gardens of Versailles, inspired by Italian originals, which Le Nôtre interpreted with an amplitude and harmony hitherto unknown, are the master-piece of French gardening. By their vases of marble and bronze, their many statues so artistically placed, the variety of their fountains of such different design and form, by their jets which leap lightly into the air, they form a unique whole. Their immense vistas, stretching back towards the horizon, their great broad lines beneath the wide expanse of sky, their lakes reflecting the heavens as in a mirror, contrast delightfully with the sombre solitude and mysterious air of some of the narrow, straight pathways beneath the intertwined boughs of the trees.

The general aspect of the gardens is, of course, appreciably different to what it was in the days of Louis XIV. If in its broad lines it is still the same, as well as nearly all the sculptural decoration, in its early days the paths were carriage tracks, without grass, and the hedges, reaching to the lower boughs of the trees, surrounded the different portions of the gardens like screens, leaving the roadways unobscured overhead. It was not until the XVIII century that fresh trees were planted along the paths and first covered them with the beautiful leafy arches now so much admired. Also, certain portions disappeared altogether and others took their places. It is, therefore, essentially the Park as seen by Louis XV and Louis XVI that we have before us to-day. A partial re-planting of the trees had already taken place, under Louis XIV, following the severe winter of 1709; a general re-planting was necessary under Louis XVI, in 1776; a third was executed in the XIX century, from 1860, followed by another, only partial, following the winter of 1879-1880. The trees of the park are in about their fourth generation.

ITINERARY I. — TERRACE OF THE PALACE, FOUNTAIN OF LATONA, ORANGERY, PIECE D'EAU DES SUISSES (LAKE OF THE SWISS GUARDS), ALLÉE D'EAU AND NEPTUNE. — If the park be entered either on the right of the main body of the Palace (by the Courtyard and the Passage of the Chapel) or on the left (by the Courtyard and the Vestibule des Princes), the visitor finds himself on the grand Terrace above the fountains.

The Terrace of the Palace runs up to, and is level with, the ground-floor of the Palace; on the other side, seven steps lead down to the Parterres d'Eau.

The Terrace is adorned with four beautiful bronze statues, after the antique (Bacchus, Apollo, Antinous, Silenus) next the walls of the Palace, and at the angles, 2 beautiful marble vases : Vase de la Guerre (Vase of War) by Coysevox, on the right (back to the Palace); Vase de la Paix (Vase of Peace), by Tuby, on the left.

The Parterres d'Eau, as the two rectangular basins beyond this Terrace are called, are ornamented with magnificent bronzes, cast in the time of Louis XIV by the brothers Keller. At the angles of each, four statues representing the principal rivers of France (See plan, p. 48) : the Garonne, by Coysevox (before the Vase de la Guerre); the Dordogne, by the same; the Loiret, by Regnaudin; the Loire, by the same (before the Vase de la Paix); then, on the opposite side, the Seine and the Marne, by Le Hongre; the Saône (one of the most beautiful) by Tuby, and the Rhône, by the same. Between these statues, other reclining figures of Water Nymphs, by Le Hongre, Raon, Le Gros and Magnier, alternate with groups of Children, of charming grace, by Le Gros, Poultier, Van Cleve and Lespingola.

Beyond the Parterres d'Eau is the magnificent Perspective of the Latona steps. From the top of these steps (on the right and left, 2 fine marble vases ornamented with rams-heads and suns, emblem of Louis XIV, by Du Goulon, on the right, and Drouilly, on the left), we get (turning our backs to the grounds) a magnificent view of the immense façade of the Palace in all its amplitude (580 mètres, 634 yards) from one extremity to the other, with 375 windows), with balustrade coping, oriflammes and trophies in stone (taken down during the reign of Napoleon I but replaced within recent years on the central building). The spectacle of the Palace reflected in the waters of the two basins already mentioned is magnificent. — In the other direction, the view is no less imposing. Below is the Fountain of Latona, in red marble and gilded lead details. On the summit of the fountain, Latona, with Apollo and Diana, her two children, pleads to Jupiter to avenge the insults she has suffered from the Lycian peasants, the latter are seen metamorphosed, more or less completely, into frogs; around them are tortoises and lizards. When the fountains play, jets of water are thrown up from the figures of men and animals, crossing and intermingling around the principal figure. — Below this fountain are two others, often, but erroneously, called the Bassins des Lézards (Lizard Fountains) continuing the metamorphosis. — Leading down towards the Tapis Vert (Lawn) along the horse shoe balustrades planted with yew trees, are statues, for the most part reproductions from the antique, on the right: Melancholy, Antinous, Barbarian prisoner, Faun, Bacchus, Empress Faustine or Ceres, Commodus, Urania, Ganymede, and on the other side of the path: Venus with a Shell (copy after Coysevox, charming work); on the left: Lyric Poem, Ceres, Barbarian prisoner, Venus, Calliope, Silenus and Bacchus, Antinous, Mercury, Urania, Apollo Belvedere and on the opposite side of the path the Dying Gladiator. In the centre of the horse shoe, small sculptured marble vases, subjects of antiquity. — Beyond, the Tapis Vert (Lawn) (p. 77) leads away down straight before us to the Fountain of Apollo (p. 79) and the Grand Canal (p. 80), stretching back to the line of the horizon, with large poplar trees in the distant background.

The sun-set, seen from the top of the steps behind the Latona fountain, is a magnificent sight. The immensity and openness of this part have caused it to be known locally as the beach.

On the Terrace, on each side of the Latona steps, are the two Fountains of Diana and Point du Jour (Break of day), or Cabinets des Animaux.

The Fountain of Diana (on the right, turning one's back to the Palace) is preceded (by the side hedge) by a charming statue, Air, by Le Hongre (a woman with an eagle at her feet and a chameleon near her right hand); she is next to Diana the huntress, by Desjardins (she symbolises the Evening and holds her bow in her hand; a greyhound is by her side) and Venus, by Marsy. Two bronze groups, by Keller, also ornament this fountain (1687): Lion overcoming a boar and Lion fighting a wolf, by Van Cleve), life-like and striking.

The Fontaine du Point-du-Jour (Break of Day) on the left is preceded (by the side hedge) by the statue of the Break of Day, by Marsy (a woman with a star on her forehead). Flanked by Spring, by Magnier, and Water, by Le Gros, the fountain is ornamented with other bronzes by Keller (Bear and Tiger, Dog and Stag) by Houzeau.

Towards the left of the Terrace stretch the Parterres du Midi (South garden beds), dominating the Cent Marches (Hundred Stairs), the Orangerie and the Pièce d'Eau des Suisses (Lake of the Swiss Guards).

The Parterres du Midi are ornamented with « embroidery of box-wood » describing graceful rosaces; from the Terrace these are reached by steps flanked by 2 charming Sphinx and Cupid, in bronze and marble, by Sarrazin and Le Rambert (facing the Vase de la Paix). They are bordered by vases of bronze of exquisite ornamentation, by Baffin, and, at the angles, by marble vases. Before the Cabinet des Animaux, reclining statue of Ariadne (or Cleopatra), copied at Rome by Van Cleve; on the same side, a little farther on, three pink marble steps immortalised by the Poet Musset (there are six). On the opposite side, in a recess, at the extremity of the wing of the Palace, head statue of Napoleon I, in Roman costume, mantle covered with bees, and wearing a laurel wreath, by Bosio (it was intended to be placed in the triumphal chariot on the Arch of the Carrousel, Paris, but, owing to the vicissitudes of political change, eventually found its way to this somewhat obscure corner).

The double staircase, known as the Cent Marches (Hundred Steps (103 steps; 20 metres, 21 yards, wide), of cyclopean aspect, recalling the enormous edifices of Egypt and Chaldea; they are the work of Mansart and flank the Orangery, of which they form part. At their base, elegant porches with sculptured groups (Venus and Adonis, Zephyr and Flora, by Le Comte, on the right; Vertumnus and Pomona, Aurora and Cephalus, by Le Gros, on the left).

The Orangerie, built by Mansart (1684-1686; visitors not admitted, but magnificent view of the whole from the upper terrace) adjoins the Parterres du Midi by large supporting walls; its interior galleries, magnificently arched, attain a development of 381 mètres, 420 yards) and enclose a statue of Louis XIV by Desjardins (1686), intended for the Place des Victoires (Paris). In the centre, where there is a round fountain, every summer there is a rare collection of orange trees, many of which date from the days of Louis XIV.

The Pièce d'Eau des Suisses, below us, is separated from the Orangerie and the Cent Marches by the road running from Versailles to Saint-Cyr. This lake was hollowed out in 1678-1682 by a regiment of Swiss Guards (whence its name), where formerly was a swamp. The work was enormous, but contributed greatly to rendering Versailles healthy; the exhalations during the work were the cause of many deaths among the soldiers, of which, Mme de Sevigné declares, cart-loads of dead were carried away daily. The amount involved reached two millions francs, about. The lake, bordered by a stone edging, measures 140 mètres (153 yards) in length and its end touches the Satory wood, whose hilly slope shuts out the horizon; at the foot runs the main railway line to Britanny. At the extremity of the Pièce d'Eau des Suisses, statue of Louis XIV, by Bernin, transformed by Girardon into one of Marcus Curtius (the work had displeased the king, who wanted it destroyed).

Winter, by Girardon.

On the right of the Terrace, to which we return, are the Parterres du Nord, sloping down towards the Fontaine de la Pyramide, the Allée d'Eau or Des Marmousets and the Neptune lake.

The Parterres du Nord, which have exactly preserved the original design of Le Nôtre, are flanked : — on the right, by the Aile Nord (North Wing) of the Palace, dominated by the elegant roof of the Chapel, whence the roof of the Salle de l'Opera juts out in a somewhat ungainly manner; — on the left, by a wall of hedges, stretching from the Fontaine de Diane, with before it in line, following the Diana and Venus of the fountain, are five statues (Europe, by Mazeline; Africa, by Cornu; Night, by Raon; The Earth, by Massou; Pastorale, by Granier).

Taking the centre path of the Parterres du Nord, bordered by small yew trees (we reach it from the Terrace, opposite the Vase de la Guerre, by a marble staircase; on the right, Scythe écorcheur, fine green bronze after the antique; on the left, Venus kneeling, by Coysevox), we pass between the two handsome round fountains des Couronnes (crowns) or des Sirènes (Syrens) and reach the Fontaine de la Pyramide. This is a charming piece of work, executed in lead, by Girardon, from drawings by Claude Perrault, the architect of the Louvre; when the fountains play, water spurts from the top and falls splashing on the superposed basins, from which it is often called the Boiling Cauldron. — To the right and left of the Fontaine de la Pyramide, 4 statues on each side ranged by the hedge (left : Winter, by Girardon, represented by an old man warming himself before a brazier) Summer, or Ceres, by Hutinot, America, with a crocodile, by Guerin, Autumn, by Regnaudin; on the right, Satire, by C. Buyster, Asia, by Roger, Phlegmatism, by Lespagnandel, Epic, by Drouilly).

Cl. P. Gruyer.

Child figures of the Allée d'Eau.

Below the Fontaine de la Pyramide, the Bain de Diane (the Bath of Diana) shaws a delicious bas-relief by Girardon, where Diana and her naked nymphs sport among reeds. On the right, statue le Sanguin (Sanguineness) by Jouvenet; on the left, le Colérique (Anger) by Houzeau.

At the Bath of Diana begins the Allée d'Eau (roughly, Water Walk) or Allée des Marmousets. Designed by Claude Perrault and Le Brun (1676-1688) it comprises 22 small white marble fountains, each ornamented with three children in bronze, supporting a basin of red marble. All these variated groups, by Le Gros, Le Hongre and Le Rambert, are masterpieces of composition and grace.

The Allée d'Eau brings us to the Fountain of the Dragon, to the Bosquet de l'Arc de Triomphe (Grove of the Triumphal Arch) and to the magnificent Fountain of Neptune, the most colossal in the park.

The Fountain of the Dragon is one of the most ancient in the grounds; destroyed, it was reconstructed, according to the plans which still existed, by the sculptor Tony Noel in 1889. The central group represents a Dragon pierced with an arrow, shot by one of the children surrounding it, mounted on swans; the monster, with open jaws, vomits, in the place of blood, an enormous jet of water. The ensemble is charming.

The Bosquet de l'Arc de Triomphe (Grove of the Triumphal Arch) has been considerably modified since Louis XIV's time: the arc de triomphe, in wrought iron, from which spurted jets of water, and which has given it its name, no longer exists. But the fine group, France triumphant (beneath the wheels of her chariot she crushes the Spanish lion) by Tubi and Coysevox, restored, is still to be seen at the entrance of the grove. The busts and statues, of which (on the left) a curious, realistic Aesop, in coloured lead, by Le Gros, a Cupid holding Ariadne's thread (on the right) by Tubi, and (at the end of the grove) the group of Meleager killing the boar of Calydon, come from the ancient destroyed groves (the Aesop comes from the Labyrinth, p. 84). The hemicycle de Marbre, elegant, is modern; designed by the architect Leclerc (1888).

Vase de Neptune.

The Bassin de Neptune (Fountain of Neptune), commenced under Louis XIV by Le Nôtre and Mansart, was only finished under Louis XV, in 1740, by the placing in position of its colossal groups; it was restored in 1889. It forms a vast hemicircle or amphitheatre whose grass covered slopes face a supporting wall, 160 m. (175 yards) long, where are 22 leaden vases richly ornamented, which existed in the time of Louis XIV. On the wall, beneath the vases, is the principal group, of large dimensions, Neptune and Amphitrite, by Sigisbert Adam (1740) executed under Louis XV, as well as the other groups (Neptune is seated on an immense shell beside Amphitrion; he is brandishing his trident and is surrounded by Tritons and Nereïdes). On the right of this group : Ocean, leaning on a marine monster, by J. B. Le Moine; on the left, Proteus, another god of the sea, with a unicorn, by Bouchardon. At the two extremities : two fantastic marine Dragons, ridden by two cupids, by Bouchardon. — On the other side of the piece of water, beneath the trees and in the centre of the hemicircle, group in marble, Renown of Louis XIV, by Domenico Guidi; on the left (park gate side), Berenice, by Lespingola; on the right, the Empress Faustine, after the antique.

When the fountains play (p. 85) the spectacle at the Bassin de Neptune is magnificent and fairy-like.

Grove of the bath of Apollo.

From the Bassin de Neptune (from the side farthest from the town, route de Trianon), we return by the Allée d'Eau to the Fontaine de la Pyramide, where we turn to the left, at the statue of Winter, and proceed by the side of the hedge until we reach a circular space where the paths meet and cross, where we find fine marble statues representing orators and sages of antiquity : Ulyses, by Magnier (he holds a flower, talisman given to him by Mercury against the fatal charms of Circe) Lysias, by De Dieu ; Theophrastus, by Hurtrelle (he holds poppies, the flower of sleep, for he devoured those who slept too much) ; Isocrates, by Granier; Apollonius, by Melo). — On the left of this open space is the Bosquet des Bains d'Apollon (Grove of the Bath of Apollo (See below : II).

ITINERARY II. — Bosquets du Nord — or North Groves — (Bain d'Apollon, Bassins de Cérès et de Flore, Les Domes, Encelade), Tapis Vert, or Lawn, Bassin d'Apollon and the Grand-Canal (See plan, p. 64). — N. B. To visit the closed bosquets, or groves, application should be made to the ground keepers at the Poste des Gardes (small gratuity general) at the entrance of the Lawn; during summer the keepers generally station themselves near the entrances to the different groves expressly for the purpose of showing visitors over.

The Bains d'Apollon (Bath of Apollo) are reached from the right of the Latona steps (charming statue of a Nymph with a shell, copy, after Coysevox). There is another entrance at the north-west angle of the Parterres du Nord (See below). A third is by the open space in front of the Bassin de Cérès. — This grove, rather different to the others in its general aspect, dates from Louis XVI and was designed, after the general replanting of the park in 1776, by Hubert Robert; it belongs to the « landscape garden » class, then competing for favour against the old « French garden », and to which also belong the Petit Trianon gardens. Beneath an enormous artificial rock, in a deep cave, is a marble group of the Bath of Apollo, Apollo waited on by Nymphs, by Girardon and Regnaudin (constructed in the time of Louis XIV for another grove since destroyed); on the right, 2 groups of the Chevaux d'Apollon, horses of Apollo, watered by Tritons, by Guérin and the brothers Marsy. The sombre lights and shades of this grove are magnificent.

We leave the grove by the angle to the right (turning one's back to the grotto) and find ourselves before the charming Bassin de Cérès (Fountain of Ceres) or Summer, by Regnaudin.

[Beyond the Fountain of Ceres, and towards the right, would lead us, a short way back from the hedge, to the Bassin des Enfants (Children's fountain), with its delicious figures by Hardy. — Behind this Bassin des Enfants, the Rond-Vert (Green Circle) occupies the place of the ancient Théâtre d'Eau, to-day disapeared; it is ornamented with ancient statues, restored under Louis XIV, but damaged (Flora, Pomona, Ceres and Health). – Facing the Bassin des Enfants, Bosquet de l'Etoile (Grove of the Star, once known as the Montagne d'Eau (Water Mount) also disappeared, ornamented by a few antique statues of the period of Louis XIV.]

From the Bains d'Apollon and the Bassin de Cérès the visitor returns towards the left (Allée de l'Eté) to the entrance of the Lawn, which is preceded by a magnificent row of marble statues (Cérès, by Poultier; Diogenes, by Lespagnandelle; Fawn, by Houzeau; Bacchante, by De Dieu; Hercules, by Le Comte).

The Tapis-Vert (Green Carpet, as the Lawn is called) follows the steps of Latona. It is preceded by a half moon (on the left, Poste des Gardes, where the keepers are stationed : they have the keys of the closed groves, which they will show on application), with four groups of sculpture : on the right (turning one's back to the Palace), Papirius and his mother and Laocoon strangled with his sons by serpents, after the antique; on the left, Castor and Pollux and Gaul and wife, after the antique. On this side, the line of marble statues is continued (Achelous, Pandora, Mercury, Plato and Circe, p. 84), facing which opens the Bosquet of the Salle de Bal (Ball-room grove) (See Bosquets du Nord, p. 85; to be visited at once if pressed for time).

Cl. P. Gruyer.

Cérès, by Poultier.

The Tapis-Vert, or Lawn, known under Louis XIV as the Allée Royale, or Royal Way, was in his time flagged with stone, and much used for drives in the state coaches. It is 330 m. long, by 40 wide (360 yds. by 43) and covered with grass. On each side are fine marble vases and statues, the whole sloping gently down to the Fountain of Apollo (p. 79).

[Statues on the Lawn. — Right side (turning one's back to the Palace): Deceit, by Le Comte (a female figure holding a mask, a fox at her feet); Juno, antique statue, restored under Louis XIV; Hercules and Telephe, copied from the antique; Venus de Medicis, idem; Cyparissus, by Flamen (unconsoleable at having killed a deer that he loved, he was changed by Apollo into a cyprus); entrance of the Bosquet des Domes (Grove of Domes) (See below); Artemisia, by Desjardins (she is about to drink from a goblet the dissolved cinders of her dead husband Mausolus). — Left side: Fidelity, by Le Fevre (holding a heart), pendant to Deceit; Venus, by Le Gros, remarkable work in which the sculptor has made use of an antique torso; Faun, after the antique; Dido, by Poultier (Abandoned by Aeneas, she is about to throw herself on the burning pyre); entrance to the Colonnade, p. 82; Amazon, by Buirette; Achilles at Scyros, by Vigier (disguised in female clothing, he is discovered by Ulysses by the display of arms). — For the surroundings of the Bains d'Apollo, See p. 79.]

Descending the right side of the Tapis Vert, we reach the entrance to the Bosquet des Dômes (Grove of Domes).

The Bosquet des Dômes has undergone numerous modifications; to the right and left were two domed pavilions (whence its name; the square foundation can still be seen); its decorations of marble and gold have been remade within recent years. Fine statues (from right to left: Break of Day, by Le Gros; Ino, by Rayol; Nymph, by Flamen; Arion, by Raon; Galathea, by Tuby; Acis, by the same; Aurora, by Magnier).

[N. B. — If the visitor is pressed for time and wishes to visit the Trianons at once without retracing his steps, he can leave by the same exit, recross the Lawn, and visit the Colonnade at once (p. 82), afterwards continuing down the Lawn to the Apollo Fountain (See below); from there, to the right, to visit the Fountain of Enceladus (See below which is behind the Bosquet des Dômes.]

Leaving the Bosquet des Dômes by the side opposite that towards the Lawn, we have: on the right, the Bassin de Flore (Fountain of Flora) or Spring, by Tuby, and on the left, the Bosquet d'Encelade.

The Bosquet d'Encelade (Grove of Enceladus) contains the fountain of the same name, with pieces of rock emerging from the water (they represent the debris of the mountains heaped up by Titan to reach heaven, and under which Enceladus is buried, by B. Marsy. His face is menacing, his fists clenched; from his mouth, when the fountain plays, a jet of water, 23 m. (25 yards), spurts into the air.

The Bosquet de l'Obélisque (Grove of the Obelisk) also known as the Bouquet of the Hundred Pipes, follows (turning one's back on the Lawn and the Fountain of Apollo) the Bosquet d'Enceladus. Constructed after plans prepared by Mansart, in its centre is a raised fountain, on a grassy slope : numberless jets, spurting from a mass of reeds, form a sort of liquid obelisk.

[N. B. — Continuing beyond the Bosquet de l'Obélisque would take us (five to ten mintes, about) direct to the Trianons.]

From the Bosquet de l'Obélisque, we return, to the left, towards the beautiful Allée d'Apollon, path which leads back to the Fountain of Apollo.

The Bassin d'Apollon (Fountain of Apollo) at the end of the Lawn, a vast octagonal piece of water (110 m. — 120 yds — at the widest part, 75 m. — 82 yds — at the narrowest) has in the centre a fine group, Appolo's Chariot (he is emerging from the sea at the break of dawn, among tritons and marine monsters), by Tuby. A curious effect of perspective, which, from the adjoining paths, renders the water invisible, leaving only the chariot in view, as if emerging from the ground, has given to the fountain a second name of the embedded Chariot).

The Half-Moon Esplanade which precedes the Fountain of Apollo is bordered by statues. At the end of the Lawn : 2 groups of Aristaeus and Proteus (the shepherd Aristacus chains the marine god Proteus to a a rock, in order to draw from him the secret of his predictions), by Slodty (1722), and Ino and Melicertus (Ino throwing herself into the sea whith her son Melicertus to escape the fury of her husband, suddenly become mad), by Granier, after Girardon. — On each side of the grass covered esplanade which follows the Half-Moon and runs towards the Grand-Canal : Roman emperor, Bacchus, Hercules, Leucothoe, Hercules, Juno; on the right : Roman emperor, Bacchus, Apollo, Light, Roman Consul, Cleopatra). — On this same side are the remains of the ancient low buildings of Petite Venise (little Venice) where were logded the Venetian sailors who manœuvred the fleet of gondolas on the Grand-Canal in the days of the great Louis XIV.

Two rows of railings separate the esplanade of the Fountain of Apollo from the Grand-Canal and mark the limit of the gardens or Park of Versailles properly speaking from the ancient Petit-Parc which stretches beyond.

Boats : — Motor boats, less then 6 persons : 3 fr, to make the tour around the Canal, 1 fr. 50 to the Trianon; otherwise by the ordinary motor boats : fare 50 c. per person the tour around the canal, and 25 c. to the Trianon. — Rowing boats, 50 c. per hour per person.

Fishing : — 1 fr. per line for the day.

Restaurant : — du Grand Canal (lunch or dinner, 3 fr.), at the entrance to the Canal, near the pontoon.

The Grand-Canal, dug out in the time of Louis XIV, measures 1,670 m. (1826 yds) in length : its average width is 62 m. (57 yds), at its extremity 190 m. (208 yds). It is cut in the chape of a cross at its centre by two arms (500 m. 546 yds. each in length), one going towards the Trianon, the other to the ancient Menagerie (to-day school of Military bridge builders), the origin of the Jardins des Plantes (Zoological Gardens) of Paris. Its total perimeter is 5 k. 1/2 (3 2/5 miles) and it covers 23 hect. (51 acres). In Louis XIV's time it possessed a veritable fleet of boats for the distraction of the court, as well as more elaborate and often richly decorated barks, and two fairly large boats with sails, one of which carried no less than 32 cannons; 60 sailors, gondoliers and carpenters were attached to this pleasure fleet and lodged in the small buildings of the Petite Venise (little Venice) by the Fountain of Apollo.

The Petit-Parc (small park) whose lofty magnificent trees run right to the water's edge, served as a hunting preserve. It is crossed by large avenues; to the right, to the Grand Trianon, and beyond that to Marly; to the left, towards Saint-Cyr. The Park ends at the Grille Royale, or railings, which are seen at the extremity of the Canal and which separates the park from the plaine de Gally, which is crossed by the Grande Ceinture (Outer Circle) railway line.

Beyond the Petit-Parc, formerly spread the Grand-Parc, reserved for big hunting meets, covering an area of 6,000 hect. (13.500 acres) of country; numerous villages and pools of the upper levels which feed the fountains.

From the head of the Grand-Canal we could, if desired, go straight to the Trianon (p. 87) by the large avenue, Avenue de Saint-Antoine, in front of the landing stage. — On the other side of the Canal, this same Avenue continues under the name of the Allées des Matelots, ending at the road from Versailles to Saint-Cyr (route de Chartres).

Otherwise, we continue the visit to the Park by Itinerary III, returning towards the Palace by the Bosquets du Midi (SOUTH GROVES).

SATURNE AND DE BACCHUS. SALLE DE BALL. See plan, p. 84. To visit the groves which may happen to be closed, application should be made to the keepers (small gratuity aiuch). The keepers will be found at the Porte des Gardes, at the entrance to the Lawn, but during the summer they will generally be found stationed near the different groves, ready to show visitors over. — N. B. This itinerary, continuation of the preceding, is from the Fountain of Apollo to the end of the Lawn, the order of the different groves described being from the Fountain of Apollo towards the Palace.

Turning one's back to the Grand-Canal and the Fountain of Apollo, we return along the right side of the Lawn to the entrance of the Bosquet Colonnade (Colonnade Grove).

The Colonnade, one of the most beautiful ornaments of the park, is the work of Mansart (1685-1688).

Inspired by the Italian and the antique, constructed entirely of pink and white marble, it is composed of a circle of arches resting on columns and pilasters. Under each is a marble basin, from which a jet spurts when the fountains play. The effect of this circle of light and elegant arches against the dark green background of tress and foliage is most beautiful. The Colonnade, 32 m. (35 yds) in diameter, is ornamented with numerous bas-reliefs, worked by the foremost architects of the period (Coysevox, Tubi, Mazière, Granier, Le Hongre, Le Comte). In the centre, to which we descend by a few steps running right round, marble group, Pluto carrying off Proserpine, one of the masterpieces of Girardon (Proserpine, scantily clad, is struggling to escape from the robust arms of the God of Hades; on the pedestal, bas-reliefs of Pluto's chariot). Louis XIV often took lunch here with his courtiers; in the days of Marie-Antoinette bands gave evening concerts here for her pleasure. When the fountains play, and from the 28 marble basins jets of water dance in the air and fall back splashing with musical rythm on the marble basins, the effect is fairylike.

Behind the Colonnade is the Salle des Marronniers (Chestnut Grove).

This grove lost much during the XVIII century; the running waters which ornamented it in the distant past have disappeared, as well as other of its decorations. There remain 2 statues (Meleager and Antinous) and 8 moss-grown busts (on the side near the Colonnade : Hannibal, Octavien, Severus, Antoninus ; on the opposite side : Marcus Aurelius, Otho, Alexander, Apollo) : these are antique, more or less repaired under Louis XIV. Two small circular fountains, with a marble basin, stand at each end of this shady and melancholy grove.

From the Chestnut Grove, a few steps take us to the Bassin de Saturne, or de l'Hiver (Fountain of Saturn, or Winter) by Girardon (charming group, an old bearded man, Time, surrounted by winged cupids, one with a whistle).

Almost immediately on the right is the Jardin du Roi (King's Garden) preceded by the Bassin du Miroir (Mirror Fountain).

The Bassin du Miroir, or Mirror Fountain, with grassy sloping banks (4 statues : 3 Vestals, Apollo, and Venus, antique restored) is all that is left of the grove known in the time of Louis XIV as the Ile Royale (Royal Island) or Ile d'Amour (Island of Love) and which, with a small lake and island in the middle, stood where is now the Jardin du Roi.

The Jardin du Roi (King's Garden) (1816), facing the Mirror Fountain, was designed by the architect Dufour, under Louis XVIII, in place of the Ile Royale (Royal Island) whose waters had become stagnant.

Cl. P. Gruyer.

Fountain of Neptune.

Surrounded by trellis work, it is renowned for its beautiful flowers. In the centre, elegant pillar bearing a small statue of Flora. Outside the trellis, large statues of Hercules Farnese and Flora Farnese, copies from the antique (made under Louis XIV).

We return to the Fountain of Saturn, whence we proceed (same pathway) to the Bassin de Bacchus or de l'Automne (Fountain of Bacchus, or Autumn) with its exquisite group by Marsy. At the end of the path can be seen the enormous supporting walls of the Orangerie.

To the right of the Fountain of Bacchus, we enter the Bosquet de la Reine, ancient Labyrinth.

Under Louis XIV a labyrinth, whose paths, bordered by tall hedges, crossed and recrossed and turned and twisted in a clever manner, enclosed a number of fountains whose ornamented lead work represented besides divers animals, the fables of Aesop. This grove was destroyed in the time of Louis XVI, in 1775, and the present grove, at first called the Bosquet de Venus, was erected at the same time as the Baths of Apollo. It contains 4 busts and 3 statues (Minerva, after Coustou; Diana, by Flamen, in the centre; Fighting Gladiator, after the antique). — It was in this grove that the principal scenes of the mysterious affair of the Queen's Necklace took place. The Cardinal de Rohan, who displeased Marie-Antoinette, greatly desired to gain her favour. Mme de la Motte, a descendant in an irregular manner of the Valois, made him believe that she was in the queen's confidence and that she often met her at night in the park. On the 11th August, 1784, a young woman of worthless reputation, Nicole d'Oliva, who greatly resembled Marie-Antoinette, was dressed exactly like the queen and brought to this grove by Mme de la Motte. Rohan, on his knees, took a flower which she held out to him, and a few days later paid Mme de la Motte the sum of 50.000 pounds, which sum she said she was borrowing on behalf of Marie-Antoinette, who had asked her to procure it from the Cardinal Rohan. A year after, encouraged by her first success, Mme de la Motte made Rohan believe that the queen wished to purchase from a jeweller named Bohmer by his intermediary, a diamond necklace of the value of 1,600.000 pounds, which she would pay by bills. Rohan stood surety for the payment and the safe custody of the necklace, which, handed by him to Mme de la Motte, was immediately sold in parts. Soon the whole affair came to light. But instead of hushing the matter up, Marie-Antoinette, exasperated with Rohan, committed the grave error of having him arrested, although it was evident to all that the Cardinal had simply been duped. He was acquitted by Parliament, who tried the case, thus making the whole court, in the person of Marie-Antoinette, already so little popular, more or less a laughing stock.

From the Fountain of Bacchus we cross to the other side of the Bosquet de la Reine, towards the Latona steps and the upper end of the Lawn by the Allée d'Automne (Autumn Walk) ornamented with fine statues in marble : Circe, by Magnier (the sorceress with the enigmatic smile); Plato, by Rayol (he holds an effigy of Socrates); Mercury, by Van Cleve; Pandora, by Le Gros (she is holding the fatal box from which all ills of humanity escaped through her curiosity); Achelous, by Mazière (with the horn of plenty). — A little before the balustrade by the Latona stairs, on the right, entrance to the Bosquet de la Salle de Bal (Grove of the Ball Room).

The Salle de Bal (Ball Room Grove) or des Rocailles (Grotto Work) dates from Louis XIV; it has been restored. Facing the grotto, where a cascade falls over the rocks, the Salle de Bal is a grassy amphitheatre. Vases and large ornaments, in lead, formerly gilded, and a group of Cupid vanquishing a Fawn, complete the decoration. Dancing took place on the flat ground, the musicians being above the rockery, the spectators sitting on the sloping sides of the salle, where refreshments were also served.

From the Salle de Bal we return to the upper end of the Lawn, leaving on the right the statue of the Dying Gladiator, from the antique, and on the left the Quinconce du Midi (South Quincunx) (military bands play here, in summer, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Sundays, from 3 to 4.30 p. m.).

ITINERARY OF THE GRANDES EAUX (Grandes Eaux means the Playing of the fountains, being the general term applied to this wonderful spectacle, for days and hours, See p. 10). The wonderful display of the fountains playing is one of the principal attractions of Versailles. It is a remarkable fairylike sight.

The total number of jets of water when the fountains play is 607 (under Louis XIV there were 1100) and they need 10,000 cubic m. (10,900 cu. yards) of water; the water of the upper fountains, after being used, passes to the lower. There are 12 2/5 miles of subterranean canals. This water is supplied in greater part by a whole system of lakes and pools on the plain above Versailles. The famous Machine de Marly (See History, p. 17) serves no other purpose now than supplying water to the town.

Itinerary. — To see the fountains playing (the display lasts an hour, and one can see all without undue hurry), this is the itinerary to be followed, and which is followed, as a matter of fact, by nearly all the crowd. — Wait on the Terrace of the Palace, at the Parterres d'Eau (at each a jet of 10 m., 11 yds high, surrounded by 16 inclined jets forming a basket-like cross work) for the commencement of the display (water turn-cocks can be seen with their large keys at different points). To the right and left of the Latona steps : Fountains of Diana and Point du Jour (Break of Day). Below, the Fountain of Latona, where the jets from the mouths of the frogs and tortoises cross and recross as they spurt upwards over the figure of Latona. — Descend the steps, to the left, towards the Tapis Vert, or Lawn. A little before the entrance to the Lawn, on the left : Salle de Bal or des Rocailles (Ball Room Grove or Grotto) where the water falls on to the grotto in silvery sheets. — Return (on the left, small fountain of Bacchus) to the Lawn which we descend on the left to the Colonnade, one of the most fairylike sights, with its musical plashing water falling into the ring of basins. — Return to the Lawn and continue to its end to the Fountain of Apollo (three enormous jets of water, one 18 m. (19 yds) the others 15 (16 yds).

From the fountain of Apollo, we retrace our steps, and, on the left (turning our backs to the fountain of Apollo) we visit the Fountain of Enceladus where the agonised giant, surrounded by bubbling water, vomits a jet 23 m. (25 yds) into the air. — From Enceladus, continuing towards the left, we reach the Obelisque, where a number of jets form a regular tower of water. — Returning, with our backs to the Obelisque, we reach the fountain of Flora, then to the right, towards the Lawn, the Bassin des Dômes (Fountain of Domes) the balustrades of which form gutters. — Reascending the Lawn towards the Palace, we enter, at the extremity of the Lawn, on the left, the Bosquet des Bains d'Apollo (Grove of the Baths of Apollo). — We leave it by the opposite side, below the Parterres du Nord; Bassins des Couronnes (Fountain of Crowns) or Sirenes (Syrens): Fountain of the Pyramid, known also as the Boiling Cauldron. — Then, by the Fountain of the Bath of Diana (Bain de Diane) below the last named and the Allée des Marmousets, we reach the Bassin du Dragon (Fountain of the Dragon) jet of 27 m. (29 yds) high, the highest in the park) and the Fountain of Neptune.

The Bassin de Neptune (Fountain of Neptune), which plays the last, is the most splendid of all : it is the sight; 63 jets throw their water skyward like as many liquid lances, from the vases of lead and from the margin on which they rest, whilst the central group of Neptune and Amphitrite are half obscured by a mass of rushing water springing up from all around them

THE TRIANONS

The Grand Trianon and the Petit Trianon, except on Mondays, are open as follows; from May 1st to August 31st, from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m.; from September 1st to October 31st, from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m.; from November 1st to March 1st, from 11 a. m. to 4 p. m.; from March 1st to April 30th, from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m.

The park and the gardens are open every day until dark.

The Trianons are reached : From the town, by the Boulevard de la Reine and the Avenue de Trianon; tram (pink disc) from the station (Rive Droite) to the Trianon (15 c.), with facility to change cars (20 c.); cab, 1 fr. 25; motor-taxi, See p. 9; — from the Palace, on foot, by the Park, 20 minutes, about; — from the Park (Grand Canal), by boat, See p. 80.

THE GRAND TRIANON

The tramcar brings us to the entrance gate of the wall which envelops the two Trianons; before us is the Grand Trianon, and on the right, the Petit Trianon. On the left, Avenue de Saint-Antoine, going towards the Grand-Canal; on the right, same avenue ending at the heavy Porte Saint-Antoine, constructed under Louis XVI, in neo-Greek style, and from where starts the Route de Rocquencourt. — Cabs and automobiles are allowed to go right up to the inner entrances of the two palaces.

The Palais du Grand Trianon, which has no upper story, was built by order of Louis XIV as a reatreat in which to rest occasionally from the ceremonious official life of the Palace of Versailles.

The building, with its sumptuous decoration of marble in the Italian style, surrounded by verdure, is a beautiful one. The coping formerly carried vases and groups of children.

History. — Louis XIV. even in the early days of the construction of Versailles Palace, had a small pavilion on this spot, known as the Trianon de Porcelaine (Chinese in style, decorated in blue and white), where he passed his time occasionally in the company of the queen and Mme de Montespan; a rich garden of flowers surrounded the retreat. In 1687 he had this charming building destroyed, and the present Trianon was commenced by Mansart, who at the same time laid out the park and its fountains, aided doubtlessly by his nephew Robert de Cotte. Louis XIV, who put one of the apartments at the disposal of Mme de Maintenon, towards the end of his reign almost entirely abandoned the Trianon for Marly.

Louis XV had considerable interior alterations executed, as much in improving the decoration as in making the rooms more confortable and less cold; he also extended the gardens towards the right and built the Petit Trianon, by Gabriel (See p. 97). The latter was specially favoured under Louis XVI and Marie-Antoinette.

Napoleon had the Grand Trianon re-furnished, which, like Versailles, had been emptied at the time of the Revolution, and stayed in it several times; he retired to its solitude, notably, on December 16th, 1809, the day of his divorce from Josephine; in 1810 he came here with Marie-Louise. Rich Empire furniture still remains in large part or has been re-installed.

Restauration. — In 1815, the Allies took possession of the Trianon. In 1818, the Duke of Wellington was received here by Louis XVIII with whom he dined. On July 31st, 1830, Charles X, flying from Paris, took refuge here with the Duchess de Berry for a few hours, before continuing his flight to Rambouillet.

Louis-Philippe altered and restored the Grand Trianon after his own fashion, in 1837: he daubed the gilded decorations, installed a room and a chapel, as well as furniture, and often held his council meetings here. Finally, like Charles X, he also stayed here for the last time, in his flight on February 24th, 1848.

Under the Second Empire, a certain amount of old furniture, of the monarchy and the First Empire, was re-installed. Lastly, on December 10th, 1873, Marshal Bazaine was tried, in connection with his conduct during the War of 1870, and condemned to death, beneath the peristyle of the Grand Trianon, which, in the time of Napoleon I, had been transformed into a windowed gallery.

The Trianon is at present under the superintendence of M. Humberdot.

The Cour du Grand Trianon (Courtyard) is closed on the entrance side by a trench. On the left are the ancient Communs, to day the offices of the Administrator. — Passing the bridge and the central gate, the visitor finds himself in a square Court, with a magnificent open Peristyle, with columns and pilasters of coloured marble, overlooking the verdure of the park. The entrance to the palace is on the left, in the Courtyard; the visit is made in groups conducted by a guardian (small gratuity usual).

Aile Gauche (Left Wing). — A long corridor leads to the Salon des Glaces (Room of Mirrors); like the Grande Galerie in Versailles, it is decorated with square panels of glass, bevelled, covering the walls; these decorations date from Louis XIV, and from this point of view, it is one of the most interesting rooms. — Fine chimney piece, period of Louis XVI. — Handsome furniture, Empire style. — Large table round which sat, in the time of Louis-Philippe, the ministers of the cabinet (Malabar oak, all one piece, 2 m. 76 (8 1/2 ft) in diameter; the pseudo-Empire style carving is poor and heavy). — This salon, and the four rooms which follow, composed the 1st Apartment of Louis XIV at the Trianon; in 1705, it became the Appartement de Monseigneur (son of Louis XIV), by which name it is usually designated; Napoleon's mother, and then Louis-Philippe, occupied this suite.

Chambre de Monseigneur. — At first Chambre de Louis XIV, then de Monseigneur (wood-work of the period, from which the gilding has disappeared, as in all the other rooms; the chimney-piece is apparently of Louis XV's time); later Chambre de Madame Mère (mother of Napoleon I) and then of Louis Philippe. The fine gilded bedstead, in Empire style, is that of Napoleon's mother as well as the hangings; Louis-Philippe made it his and added his monogram; the draperies of the alcove are of Louis-Philippe's time. The rest of the furniture and the balustrade are of the Empire. — Pictures of Flowers by Monnoyer (period of Louis XIV).

Antichambre de Monseigneur. — Wood-work of the period. — Pictures by Houasse (Life of Minerva).

Salon de la Chapelle. — Wood work of the period. — In a recess, at the end of the room, was the altar. — Pictures of Flowers, by Monnoyer (period of Louis XIV). — Louis XV (at sixteen) and Marie Leczinska (at twenty-two) by J.-B. Van Loo.

Salle des Princes or des Seigneurs. — This room filled practically the same role as the Œil de Bœuf at Versailles, and it formed the entrance, from the central Peristyle. — Above the chimney-piece, Arms of Louis XIV, painted by Mignard.

On leaving we cross the outer peristyle to reach the Right Wing (Aile Droite).

Aile Droite (Right Wing). — Salon des Colonnes (Room of Pillars) or Salon Rond (Round Room). The major part of its fine decorations dates from Louis XIV; the convex arrangement above the doors, restored, is of Louis XV's time; the room was then transformed into a chapel, which it remained in the reign of Louis XVI. Under Louis XIV, it was the Antichambre des Appartements de réception, which occupied the rooms following.

of the facade overlooking the park, its name comes from the fact that it faces the west.

Salon Frais. — Shaded by large trees (whence its title of the « Cool Room »). — Pictures : Louis XIV, the Grand Dauphin (son of Louis XIV), the Duc de Bourgogne (son of the Grand Dauphin), the Duc d'Anjou (who became king of Spain), by, or after, Rigaud; Louis XV, by Van Loo; the Dauphin (son of Louis XV) by Nattoire. — Malachite goblet and vases (clever mosaic of numberless small pieces), gift of the Emperor of Russia to Napoleon, after the Peace of Tilsit; the mountings were made in France, whence the name often applied to this room, Salon des Malachites.

Turning Wing. — On the left of the Salon Frais opens the Grande Galerie, occupying the whole of this wing overlooking the park.

The Grande Galerie has preserved its ancient decorations by Mansart (the gilding has disappeared) and its motifs of carved wood; the red marbles and gilded bas-reliefs are of the time of Louis Philippe. —

Between the windows, interesting ancient pictures by Cotelle, representing the Gardens of Versailles in the reign of Louis XIV, treated with charming grace in mythological style (the Gods and Nymphs descending from the sky to sport in the gardens). — Fine white marble tables, from the park of the Petit Trianon. — The Grande Galerie is terminated by a large salon, known as the Salon des Jardins, which opens on one side on to the park, on the other, on to part of the grounds known as Trianon-sous-Bois.

Aile du Trianon-sous-Bois (Wing of the Trianon-sous-Bois; not open to visitors), added in the reign of Louis XIV to the first building to enlarge it. — In large part the original decorations have been preserved. It comprises two floors. — The Princess Palatine, mother of the Regent, lived here under Louis XIV. A chapel which still exists (without interest) was installed under Louis-Philippe.

We return to the Salon Frais.

Salon des Sources. — Thus named by Louis XIV from numerous little sources which flowed into the gardens beneath its windows. It served, as well as the Salon Frais, as apartment to the Duchesse de Bourgogne, daughter-in-law of Louis XIV and mother of Louis XV. — Pictures by Boucher (whence its other name of « Salon des Bouchers »): Neptune and Amymone; Venus and Vulcan; Bonne Aventure; Fishing (these pictures, placed here in the time of the Restoration, have been heightened). — On the chimney-piece: Ancient Aqueduct of Nero at Rome, by Hubert Robert. — Winter, by N. Coypel. — Napoleon turned this room into a Library.

After this room, the visitor finds himself at the facade overlooking the gardens (Jardins du Roi). In Louis XIV's time the 5 rooms formed the Apartment of Mme de Maintenon. They were afterwards occupied by Louis XV (in 1744), by the king of Poland (father of Marie Leczinska, wife of Louis XV) and by Mme de Pompadour. Finally, this was the Apartment of Napoléon and Marie-Louise at the time of the christening of the King of Rome (1811). The decorations of the room and furniture (some of it re-installed) are of the period.

Antichambre. Yellow hangings (remade). — Cabinet de Travail (Study) of Napoleon I. Blue hangings, ancient. — Salle de Bains. The bath is covered.

Chambre de Marie-Louise (Napoleon also had his, room, but which it was is not known exactly). Bed of elm, with appliques of gilded copper (it comes from the Chateau de Meudon), magnificent specimen of Empire style, and fine coverlet of silk. Bust of Marie-Louise. Fine clock and beautiful round table. — Salon Jaune (Yellow Room). Table in Roman mosaic, presented to Napoleon by the Pope (the mounting is mediocre, but the mosaic is of great value on account of its minuteness). Curious clock.

We turn to the side overlooking the other part of the Jardin du Roi. The rooms which follow comprised at first, under Louis XIV, a room for theatricals (Salle de Comédie) also balls and ballets, destroyed in 1705, when Louis XIV gave to the Grand Dauphin his apartment in the left wing. Then the 2nd Apartment of Louis XIV was installed.

Antichambre du Roi (King's Antechamber). — Fine chimney-piece (Louis XV period). — Fine table of Louis XIV's time, with mosaic top (animals). — Pictures: Flowers, by Monnoyer, and Flowers and Fruit, by Blain de Fontenay (Louis XIV).

Chambre du Roi King's Chamber. — Disfigured; it was furnished in Louis-Philippe's time for Queen Victoria, but she did not stay here; the furniture and bed are of poor taste. — Pictures: Flowers, by Monnoyer and Flowers and Fruit by Blain de Fontenay (time of Louis XIV).

A small antechamber and exit corridor occupy what was formerly the Cabinets du Roi King's Study, Council Chamber, etc.

Park of the Grand Trianon.

We leave the building by the same courtyard by which we entered.

N. B. — If pressed for time, the Musée des Voitures (Museum of state Coaches) can be visited at once (on the left on leaving the Grand Trianon; p. 95), and then the Petit Trianon (p. 97). If not pressed for time, then the interesting visit to the park of the Grand Trianon can be undertaken.

Parc du Grand Trianon.

The Park of the Grand Trianon was designed by Mansart; less visited than that of Versailles, it possesses a powerful though somewhat melancholy charm. The fountains play on the third Sunday in each month in summer.

From the outer Peristyle of the Trianon, we descend to the flower beds, where are two circular basins. Here we see the facade of the Palace in all its beauty, with its columns and pilasters of pink and white marble, and the wing which doubles round by the Grande Galerie. In front (turning one's back to the palace), in a framework of sombre verdure, we see the Fountain of the Plafond d'Eau (See below), with its red marble. Directing our steps towards the left, we reach the Terrasse of the Escalier du Grand-Canal (Terrace of the Grand Canal steps), in stone, with double balustrade, horse-shoe shaped (gates closed) from which point the view is magnificent: in front, part of the ancient Menagery of Louis XIV. This is the spot where the whole court were wont to land from their gondolas. Here the boats on the Grand-Canal to-day disembark their passengers.

Bearing towards the left, we return to the Bassin du Plafond d'Eau or du Miroir: Fountain of Still Water or Mirror, decorated at the angles with pretty lead vases (modern) and 2 Dragons of Chinese style, by Hardy. Here and there statues, after the antique, covered with moss. — To the right of the Fountain (turning one's back to the palace) we reach the Buffet, fine fountain in the shape of a buffet, designed by Mansart, in white and red marble, with gilded lead-work (bas-reliefs representing sun-flowers, ducks; at the summit, Neptune and Amphitrite): this is the principal fountain of the Grand Trianon gardens. — From the Buffet we retrace our steps along the avenue facing it (note the inclined marble slabs over which passed the lighter vehicles of the Court, wheeled chairs, etc.) which ends at the wing of the Trianon known as the Aile de Trianon-sous-Bois, overshadowed by great trees. On the left, a little in front, is the Amphithéâtre adorned with 25 marble busts, after the antique, and a basin with 4 charming Nymphs. — Returning towards Trianon-sous-Bois fine handrail of wrought iron of the period of Louis XV; fine sculptured masks at the windows) which we follow round to the left (square fountain with Fawn and Panther, by Marsy and pass beneath tall fir trees and before the charming Fountain of Love restored : Cupid on a dolphin, fine basins), by Marsy, and reach (on the right the small quare flower-bed known as the Jardin du Roi King's Garden fountain with small group of cupids holding a flower, by Tuby . — From the King's Garden, a bridge, on the left (constructed in the time of Napoleon I) unites the Grand and the Petit Trianon, whilst a square door, in the wall of the park, leads back to the esplanade before the Grand Trianon.

To the left of the Palace of the Grand Trianon and the exit from the Jardin du Roi (King's Garden) is the interesting little museum of state coaches, the Musée des Voitures, in a small building, well worth visiting.

State coach used at the coronation of Charles X; enormous gilded coach, which, in spite of the repainting it has undergone in parts, gives an excellent idea of what the old state coaches of the brilliant court were like (it again saw official service at the christening of the Prince Imperial, son of Napoleon III, in 1856, when it underwent repairs and repainting; on the summit allegorical figures of fame support the imperial crown; the eagle of Napoleon has supplanted the arms of France). — Carriage used at the christening (1820) of the Duc de Bordeaux (future Count de Chambord) and then at the marriage (1853) of Napoleon III and the Empress Eugenie. Carriage of Napoleon I, known as the Topaze, used on the occasion of his marriage with Marie-Louise. — Sedan chairs of Marie Leczinska and Marie-Antoinette. — Sledges of the XVII and XVIII centuries, said to have belonged to Mme de Maintenon and Mme du Barry (the latter in the form of an animal) used in winter on the Grand-Canal. — Collection of harness.

The Petit Trianon.

THE PETIT TRIANON

The Palais du Petit Trianon (Palace of the Petit Trianon) was built for Louis XV, in 1766, by the architect Gabriel; it became especially celebrated in the time of Marie-Antoinette, who had the grounds enlarged and the famous peasant Hamlet erected.

History. — Louis XV not knowing what to do to dispel his melancholy and ennui, Mme de Pompadour had built in 1749, close to the Grand Trianon, a small farm yard (the Menagerie), with cows, chickens and pigeons, to which was soon added an elegant pavilion where the monarch could rest, known as the Pavillon Français (1751; p. 104), then a botanical garden where, in 1758, B. de Jussieu came to study. From 1762 to 1768, Louis XV completed the whole by the palace of the Petit Trianon, whose homelinesss was more in keeping with the taste of the time than all the great palaces, more and more abandoned; Gabriel was the architect. Mme du Barry here replaced Mme de Pompadour after the latter's death in 1664, to be near the king. It is here that Louis XV, on the 27th April 1774, aged 64, felt the first symptoms of small pox, the illness which carried him off. — Louis XVI, when he became king, gave the two Trianons to Marie-Antoinette. The Petit Trianon especially pleased the queen, who made it her « home », where she received her husband, not as her royal master, but simply as a guest; she alone and in her own name framed all the regulations, which caused much scandal. She was here nearly every day, when the Court was at Versailles, and often stayed a whole month at a time, freed from all the strict rules of court etiquette. The society gathered round her consisted of the Princesse de Lamballe, the des Polignacs, des Coignys, de Besenvals, de Guiches, d'Esterhazys, and her two brothers-in-law, the counts of Provence and d'Artois (who later became Louis XVIII and Charles X); people whose characters were of no great weight, and whose reputation inevitably overshadowed Marie-Antoinette. A small salle de Comédie afforded the queen the opportunity of appearing in a play, where she made her debut in court theatricals on August 1st, 1780. But the principal attraction was the new Anglo-Chinese garden, or landscape garden, constructed from 1774 to 1786; grottos, rookeries, stream, tiny pavilions, exotic trees, and, lastly, the hameau paysan (peasant hamlet), by way of a reaction of the taste for nature, popularised by Rousseau, in contrast to the old French garden. — At the Revolution the Petit Trianon was entirely denuded of furniture: part was sold, the best was reserved for the Museum of the Louvre. Napoleon used to take walks about here, and ordered useful repairs and restorations, in order to install here his sister, Pauline Borghese. — More recent works of restoration have been carried out. A certain number of pieces of furniture of the period have been replaced (many come from Fontainebleau), either contemporaneous with Marie-Antoinette or having belonged to her, for it is essentially here that the souvenir of the charming, graceful, light-hearted queen is strongest.

The Courtyard of the Petit Trianon is closed by an iron gate, through which we pass (on the right and left, small stone niches where stood the guards; on the left, Chapel, 1772, not open to visitors, containing a picture by Vien, St Louis and Marguerite de Provence visiting St Thibaut). — On the right of the Courtyard, entrance to the Grounds and the Hamlet.

At the end of the courtyard, sideways, is the palace of the Petit Trianon, square, of stone slabs, with flat roof, balustraded, columns and grooved pillars; its architecture, at the same time simple and elegant, is that of a small private mansion of the period of Louis XV. The principal facade is to the left, overlooking the garden (p. 100). The visit is made in groups, conducted by a guardian (small gratuity general).

From the Entrance Vestibule, we ascend the superb staircase with its fine banisters of wrought iron, by Gamain the elder (period of Louis XV), to which have been added the gilded monograms of Marie-Antoinette; the lantern, not less beautiful, is of the time of Louis XVI. Everywhere in this building will be found the same superposing of one style on the other.

Antichambre (1st Floor). — This has preserved its Louis XV decorations, with the exception of two panels of a later period; above the doors, painted by Natoire for Louis XV and Mme de Pompadour: Beauty relighting the torch of Love; Sleep of Diana; Telemachus and Calypso (Telemachus is painted with the features of Louis XV).

Grande salle à manger (Dining-Hall). — Interesting decorations of the time of Louis XV, executed for Mme du Barry) from drawings by Gabriel, and where we see already the birth of the Louis XVI style (neo-Greek sphinx above the doors) almost Empire style. — In the panels, two pictures, placed by Marie-Antoinette and painted to her order at Vienna, recalling a Ballet d'enfants [illegible] by her brothers and herself, aged ten. — Round the table, in stucco, [illegible] Louis XVI. — Under Louis XV, one [illegible] and the small [illegible] and its ingredients machinery, sank through the floor and trapped a freshly laden after each course, dispensing with the indiscrete presence of servants at table (traces of the trap-door can still be seen).

Petit Salon. — Served as a second dining-room under Louis XV: Marie-Antoinette had a billiard table placed here. Furniture of the period in the room. — Portrait presumed to be of Louis XVII (the little Dauphin who died in the Temple prison), copy of a pastel by Kocharsky.

Grand Salon. — The principal room, where Marie-Antoinette played the piano and gave concerts to her guests. Magnificent carved wood-work decorations (time of Louis XV; formerly painted in pale blue, picked out with gold). — Fine pieces of furniture with the monogram of Marie-Antoinette, replacing the original which were upholstered in red silk. — Piano. — 2 vases of petrified wood, mounted on bronze (Vienne, 1780), having belonged to Marie-Antoinette. — Fine applques of worked copper gilded. — Above the doors, paintings by Pater (the Dance, the Serenade, the Pastoral music).

Cl. P. Gruyer.

Grand Salon of the Petit Trianon

The rooms which follow are cut in two by an extra floor superposed.

Boudoir. — This room, from which in the days of Louis XV a staircase ascended to the floor above, was reserved for Marie-Antoinette by her architect Mique (wood work and chimney-piece designed by him). The furniture was upholstered in blue silk, with a bolster. It was in this room that the queen first saw the jeweller Böhmer to get an expla nation of the famous affair of the Necklace (p. 84). — On the chimney-piece, bust of Marie-Antoinette, smashed to pieces at the time of the Revolution.

Bed-room. — Former Study of Louis XV, became the sleeping-room of Marie-Antoinette, who always slept here alone without Louis XVI. — On the chimney-piece, charming clock with the Austrian eagles, between two vases with worked bronze; marquetry table, with initials of Louis XVI and Marie-Antoinette; chest of drawers with carvings by Gouthière; chairs with the monogram of Marie-Antoinette. — The bed, of Louis XVI's time, is not that used by the queen, but the counterpane was embroidered for her (her initials and those of the king can be seen).

Bath-room. — Installed for Marie-Antoinette; formerly botanical library of Louis XV.

On the 2ND FLOOR, not open to visitors, there existed in the time of Louis XV, above these last rooms, a low ceilinged suite consisting of a small room, a bed-room and an antechamber; the bed-room was used by Mme du Barry and Louis XV, who was here when the first symptom of his fatal illness made their appearance (See p. 97). A few other rooms were reserved for certain other interesting persons in the king's suite. A number of smaller rooms, without light or air, were for the servants.

We leave the palace by the same courtyard, and turning to the left (with the back to the palace), we enter the Gardens.

The gardens are rich in vegetation, in large part exotic trees, some of which, notably the cedars, come from the Botanical Gardens, which were created under Louis XV, by Bernard de Jussieu; the greater part of the other trees were replanted in 1830. Designed for Marie-Antoinette, from 1771 to 1786, on the plans prepared by the Count de Caraman, then the architect Mique, the gardens of the Petit Trianon are ornamented with charming structures of marble or stone, mingling their whiteness with the verdure of the surroundings, and peasant cottages which form the famous Hamlet.

Entering the gardens from the courtyard of the Petit Trianon, we follow, to the right, the boxwood hedge, which forms the border, and soon reach the Temple de l'Amour (Temple of Love). Built on a small island, it is the work (1778) of Mique and the sculptor Deschamps; 12 Corinthian columns support a coupola, under which is Cupid shaping a bow from Hercules' club, by Bouchardon (the original is now in the Louvre).

Continuing along the same path, we reach the Hamlet, whose structures (thatched cottages; walls covered with a rough cast to imitated old brickwork) form a sort of theatrical village around a large pool; without doubt the painter Hubert Robert collaborated with Mique, at least in the general arrangement.

We first come to the Mill, with its wheel (the old wheel was much bigger, large enough to grind corn), on the edge of the lake. Further to the right, and half hidden by foliage, is the Boudoir, which preceded the central structure, or Queen's Cottage. This is inclined to be semicircular, with wooden arcades and covered balcony; the body of the building to the right contained a dining-room and a Backgammon play-room; that on the left contained a billiard-table. On the 1st floor, small rooms and 2 principal Salons, on the right and left. — Behind this cottage, a smaller one, known as the Réchauffoir, served as kitchen.

Temple of Love.

On a small stone bridge we cross the stream (many fish) which leaves the pool, and on the bank of which, back a little, we see the Maison du Colombier, whose pigeon-cot can still be seen in the roof; on the ground-floor was the fowl-run. — To the left, on the edge of the pool, is the charming Dairy, with its marble tables, its small verandah, and its busts decorating the facade, next to the Tour de Marlborough (Marlborough's tower) of wood, with basement of stone (external staircase: at the top, circular balcony).

Lastly we reach, towards the right, the Farm, whose buildings, consisting of a cowshed, stables, etc., are united by a partition of stone.

Many are the legends and tales of the Hamlet of the Petit Trianon, in which Marie-Antoinette figures disguised as a farmer's wife and living, with her suite, a very open country life. Nothing is less exact, and if, dressed in a simple white gown, she sought occasional amusement by making butter, it was only to enjoy the real pleasure of drinking milk fresh from the cow, to caress the animals and to watch the work of the real peasants who peopled the farm, tending the cattle, milking the cows, and carrying wheat to the mill. The other cottages of the Hamlet were furnished with all desirable comfort, seats upholstered in silk as well as silk hangings, where one could repose at ease, dine or sup if needs be. It should be added that the surroundings were then very different to what they are now; they consisted of small enclosures and orchards, with vegetable gardens, which the peasants also looked after. The lake had been stocked with 2,349 carp, which received annually 950 pounds of bread; a boat served for rowing around the lake or fishing.

Walking by the side of the pool towards the left (at the edge, several Louisiana cyprus trees, with curious roots that emerge from the water), we follow at its extremity the little stream which flows into it until we reach a second small lake, dominated by the Belvedere, on a mound covered with boxwood, known as the Montagne de l'Escargot (Snail's Mountain). The pavilion is octagonal, designed by Mique and cost altogether 64,990 livres; of neo-Greek style it is surrounded by Sphinx, and its interior decoration is reminiscent of the paintings of Pompeii and Herculaneum. Already in the time of Marie-Antoinette the lake lacked running water, and it was regularly skimmed with nets.

To the right of the Belvedere (looking towards the lake) is the Grotto, of artificial rock, with a wooden bridge over a ravine. It was in this grotto that Marie-Antoinette passed her last hours at the Trianon; she was reposing here on October 5th, 1789, when a page came to tell her that the mob had broken into Versailles (See p. 19).

[Behind the hill on which stands the Belvedere is an interesting garden, Jardin Charpentier, or Jardin des Fleurs (garden of flowers) (exotic trees and magnificent flowers), which dates from 1850 and owes its name to the gardener who laid it out.]

From the Belvedere and the Grotto we return towards the palace of the Trianon, which is visible amidst the foliage, and leaning towards the right, we find, half hidden by the trees, the entrance to the Théâtre de Trianon (a simple colonnaded portico, with bas-relief, indicates it) erected for Marie-Antoinette, who acted here.

Inside (only visited by special authority) the hangings of blue moire were torn down in the Revolution, but the stage-front has preserved its sculptured decorations and pediment with the monogram of Marie Antoinette; the gallery is supported by volutes ornamented with remains of lions, ironical emblem chosen for it by Louis XVI.

From the theatre we arrive at the Jardin Français (French Garden), which dates from Louis XV, and is of a charming design, with its turning hedges and pleasant pathways. To the left can be seen the true façade of the palace of the Petit-Trianon with its stone staircases.

Towards the right, we find the Pavillon Français (French Pavilion), built by Gabriel (1751) for Louis XV and Mme de Pompadour (groups of children border the roofing; inside, restored, we see from the windows the rich gilded columns and the magnificent frise of the central salon, where domestic animals remind us of the farm-yard which existed near by; See p. 97).

Beyond the Pavillon Français, we could return, by the bridge at the extremity of the path, to the Grand Trianon. We can leave either by this side or by returning to the courtyard at the entrance of the Petit Trianon, or more directly by a small door in the surrounding wall of the park (behind the hedges, near the Pavillon Français, See plan; last tramcar leaves at 7.20 p. m.).

Rue Hoche and the Church of Notre-Dame.

THE TOWN

The town of Versailles contains a certain number of interesting buildings and monuments, renowned either for their architecture or for the part they played in the history of France. — The Avenue de Paris, which begins directly opposite the Palace, bisecting, as it were, the line of the facade, divides the town into two parts : the South (to the right of the Avenue de Paris, turning one's back to the Palace), which includes principally the quarter known as Old Versailles and the St Louis Quarter, as well as the Rive Gauche and Chantiers railway stations; and the North (to the left), including the Notre-Dame Quarter and the Rive Droite railway station. — For plan, See p. 12.

To the right of the statue of Louis XIV (turning one's back to the Palace), and passing the iron gate, we descend to the rue Gambetta. — At No. 1, on the left, is the Grand-Commun

(to-day a Military Hospital), built by Mansart in 1682. It housed a whole crowd of lesser court officials attached to what was known as the « Mouth » of the royal palace, supervision of the feeding of the king and his large retinue of courtiers and followers. A great number of servants attached to other services also resided here. On the eve of the Revolution they numbered no less than 2,000. The top-floor, which disfigures the building, was added in 1826. Fine entrance gate, sculptured, and beautiful interior courtyard. — Along the right of the street runs the South Wing of the Palace, to-day occupied by the Salle du Congrès (p. 63) and its different offices. About here is the Quarter of Old Versailles, where, in the days of Louis XIII, stood the little village of Versailles au Val-de-Gally, with its inns patronised by waggoners, the birth-place of the present town.

Continuing along the rue Gambetta (on the left, in the rue Saint-Julien, principal Post and Telegrah Office; the Post Office has stood here since Louis XV's time), we see on the left (No. 3) the magnificent ornamental entrance to the old Hôtel de la Guerre (1759) to-day School for Non-Commissioned Officers (in the courtyard, fine memorial to Lazare Carnot). — At No. 5, old Hôtel des Affaires Etrangères (Foreign Office), to-day Bibliothèque de la Ville (Town Library) (open from midday to 5 p. m.; Sundays till 4 p. m.; closed from August 15th to October 15th). The hotel dates from 1761; fine ornamental entrance. Besides the Salle de Lecture Publique (Public Reading-Room; 120,000 volumes, a certain number of which once belonged to Louis XIV, Louis XV, Louis XVI, Marie-Antoinette, Mme du Barry), there is a small museum (paintings and sculpture; casts by Houdon). The old Salles des Archives have preserved their magnificent decorations of the period of Louis XV as well as their paintings by Van Blarenberghe. — At No. 6 in this same street (to the right) is the ancient Hôtel de la Surintendance (1670); Louvois died here in 1691. — We arrive at the rue de l'Orangerie.

Crossing the rue de l'Orangerie (to the right, route de Saint-Cyr and Lake of the Swiss Guards), we take, almost opposite the rue Gambetta (a little to the left), the rue de la Quintinie, which leads to the rue Hardy and the ancient Potager du Roi (King's Market Garden).

The Potager du Roi (King's Market-Garden), to-day a School of Horticulture (open from 8 to 11 a. m. and from 1 to 5 p. m.; register at the concierge's lodge to be signed on entering; sale of fruit and flowers, fairly cheap) is of large dimensions; the buildings were constructed by Mansart and the market-garden planted by the celebrated La Quintinie. In the entrance courtyard (on the right, salle de vente publique, public sale-room) the bust of P. Joigneaux, agriculturist (1815-1892). Then we pass (to the left) on to the terraces of the market-garden, with statue of La Quintinie (1626-1688), by Cougny (1876) and bust of Hardy (1824-1891; first head of the Ecole Moderne d'Horticulture; fine view of the Church of Saint-Louis), by Cougny and Coutan (1898). On the side towards the Lake of the Swiss Guards is a magnificent barrier of wrought iron of the time of Louis XIV.

We continue along the rue Hardy, which leads to the Cathe- dral of Saint-Louis, built from 1742 to 1754, by Jacques Hardouin-Mansart de Sagon, nephew of the great Mansart. This is one of the rare churches built in Louis XV style still standing. Elegant in its ensemble, in spite of the clumsy ball decorations of the roof, it marks, in a period of great scepticism, the complete subsiding of religious sentiment; its lines and decorations show no touch of the artisan inspired and exalted by a great faith.

The NAVE is 23 metres (25 yards) in height at the highest point; magnificent organ by Clicquot (1761), restored in 1867 (3,000 pipes) with fine carved wood-work; to the left of the nave, fine XVIII century pew. — RIGHT AISLE. 3rd chapel : Presentation of the Virgin at the Temple, by C. de Vermont (1755); 4th chapel : Memorial to the Duc de Berry (assassinated by Louvel, 1820), by Pradier (1824). — RIGHT TRANSEPT : Picture of the Worship of the Shepherds by Restout (1761). - SACRISTY : Resurrection of the Widows's son, fine painting by Jouvenet (1708). — CHOIR : ancient confessional boxes, richly decorated; 2nd chapel : picture of Saint Louis, in satin nether garments, by Le Moyne; 3rd chapel : Prophecy of Saint John, by Boucher (in the style of his pictures of ordinary subjects and lacking in religious sentiment). — APSIS : Stained glass windows by Dévéria (XIX century). — LEFT TRANSEPT : Descent from the Cross, by J. B. Pierre (1761). — LEFT AISLE, 1st chapel (descending) : St. Peter walking on the Water, by Boucher (1764; as little religious in treatment as his other picture).

Before the church, fountain with inscription in verse, by Pluyette (1766); facing the church, statue of the Abbé de l'Epée (born at Versailles, 1721-1789; celebrated instructor of the deaf and dumb), erected in 1843, by Michaut.

[To the left of the Church of Saint-Louis (on leaving), behind a block of houses and by the rue d'Anjou, we reach the Place du Marché Saint-Louis, in the rue Royale, with the old, low built houses intact, roofed with slate (1735-1745). On one of the small walks behind these houses (S.E. angle of the place), Fountain des Quatre Pavés (heavy and square, constructed in 1766, by Pluyette, in Louis XVI style, neo-Greek). — At the extremity of the rue Royale, ancient Convent of Grandchamp, built about 1758, to-day house of the bishop.

Beyond the Marché Saint-Louis, by the rue d'Anjou, is the rue Saint-Médéric (first on the right) where at No. 4 is the house of the Parc-aux-Cerfs (its name of the « house of deer » comes from the fact that it was the centre of a hunting preserve, where Louis XV came like an ordinary citizen to meet the courtisans of a brief moment who may have taken his fancy. The house is very much disfigured.]

Facing towards the Church of Saint-Louis, we return to the rue de l'Orangerie (at its right extremity, monumental entrance to the old Hôtel des Gardes du corps du Roi (King's Bodyguard), 1731, to-day a cavalry barracks) which we pass alongside on the left, as far as the rue de Satory (1st on the right). — The rue de Satory, by the rue du Vieux Versailles (1st on the left) and the rue du Jeu-de-Paume (1st on the right) leads to the famous Jeu de Paume (covered tennis-court).

The Jeu de Paume (covered tennis-court; open every day from 11 to 5 p. m., in summer: until 4 p. m. in winter, except on Mondays) occupies a fairly large hall dating from 1686 (tennis was much in favour with the court) built specially for the royal family.

History. — On June 20th, 1789, the deputies of the Third Estate, who held their private sittings in the Salle des Menus Plaisirs or Etats Généraux (See below) and where they had invited the Clergy and the Nobless to join with them and declare themselves a National Assembly, found the doors locked, by order of Louis XVI. They then decided to held their sitting in the Salle du Jeu de Paume, where they took an oath with Bailly as their president not to separate until they had given to France a proper Constitution.

Visit. — Before the original windows with their small square panes is the inner wall to which that protected the glass in the days when the necessity of the extra facility of glass consequently sent their tennis balls crashing against them. The second gallery for the spectators is also accessible. In it the place has been converted into a national Museum. On the east wall, painting of the Oath of the Jeu de Paume, by David.

The Jeu de Paume

The composition and the personages represented are not rigorously exact (this is particular by L. O. Merson). — In the centre of the hall, statue of Bailly (by Saint Marceaux, the work commenced in 1889 by Cain). — Numerous busts of the principal deputies of the Third Estate who took the oath (among them, bust of Gambetta) and philanthropist, inventor of the Guillotine. — Glass cases contain interesting documents with signatures of many men famous for the parts they took in the Revolution (cast of Mirabeau's features after death).

The continuation of the rue du Jeu-de-Paume, then the rue de Gravelle, to the right, leads us back to the Avenue de Sceaux and the Place d'Armes (on the left).

Instead of turning to the left towards the Place d'Armes, we turned to the right along the Avenue de Sceaux, then the Avenue Thiers to the left, we should reach (passing before the statue of the Rive Gauche) the new Hotel de Ville of Versailles, in stone and brick, in pseudo-Louis XIII style, erected in 1898-1900, by Legrand. Inside, Salle des Fêtes (main hall; apply to concierge, small tip) contains a certain number of interesting ancient pictures and busts. — Next to the town hall, No. 6, Avenue de Paris, pretty sculptured entrance (XVIII century) of the Chefferie du Génie (Engineers' headquarters). — On the other side of the Avenue de Paris, the Prefecture, built in the Second Empire, is of no particular architectural interest.

A little beyond the Hotel de Ville in the Avenue de Paris is the rue des Chantiers, which leads to the Gare des Chantiers (Chantiers railway station) (at No. 17 a tablet indicates where the Salle des Menus-Plaisirs stood, demolished in 1800, where the States General sat for the first time on May 5th 1789.

1°. — If we continued along the Avenue de Paris we should find after the Prefecture, at No. 3, the Caserne de Monsieur, ancient mansion of Mme du Barry, commenced in 1772 and hardly finished in 1774 when Louis XV died (Mme du Barry never lived here). In 1775, this formed the Stables of Monsieur, brother of Louis XVI and future Louis XVIII. Note the very fine entrance in neo-Greek style, surmounted with the arms of Monsieur, disfigured during the Revolution. On each side of the entrance, small openings, still visible, admitted light to a small private staircase.

Still farther on (at No. 41 bis; twelve minutes walk, about), the Hôtel de Madame Elisabeth, sister of Louis XVI, built in 1776, to-day Château de Montreuil. — Still farther, at No. 53, ancient Hôtel d'Etienne Defeutre, valet de chambre of the Dauphine; well preserved, with its iron gates, pilasters and baskets, its belvedere and statues (1780). — Lastly, at Nos. 59-61 (2 km.) from the Prefecture — about twenty minutes walk — near the Octroi barrier, the ancient Hôtel de la Comtesse de Provence (wife of Monsieur Count de Provence, brother of Louis XVI and future Louis XVIII; 1780).

2°. — Facing the town hall, on the other side of the Avenue de Paris, is the Place des Tribunaux (on the right, the Prefecture; left, the Palais de Justice, ancient hôtel du Grand-Veneur, built by Mansart, to-day reconstructed and disfigured) followed by the rue Saint-Pierre.

This leads us to the Avenue de Saint-Cloud (by crossing and bearing lightly to the left we should find the rue Duplessis, which would take us to the Gare Rive Droite (Rive Droite station). — Taking the Avenue de Saint-Cloud to the right, we find at No. 73 the Lycée Hoche, once the Ursuline convent of Marie Leczinska (1769-1772). The chapel, constructed by Mique, in neo-Roman style is interesting (apply to concierge; tip), with its colonnaded portico and round dome; in the interior, Ionic columns, bas-reliefs by Deschamps, paintings by Briard and de Lagrenee the younger). — Beyond the Lycée, the avenue leads to the cross roads known as the Carrefour de Montreuil (to the left, important agglomeration of Grand-Montreuil with the Saint-Symphorien church, 1764-1770, interior decorations in large part modern), followed on the left by the Avenue de Picardie (road to Paris, through the woods of Ville d'Avray and Saint-Cloud).

ITINERARY II. — NORTH, OR RIVE DROITE SIDE OF VERSAILLES, CHURCH OF NOTRE-DAME. — This itinerary commences at the lower part of the Place d'Armes (turning one's back to the Palace).

At the intersection of the Place d'Armes and the Avenue de Saint-Cloud is the beginning of the rue Hoche, which leads to the square and the statue of Hoche, by Lemaire (1836; on the base the inscription runs : Hoche, born at Versailles, June 24th 1763, soldier at the age of 16, general in chief at 25, died aged 29, put down the war in the Vendee). — The rue Hoche (No. 17. Librairie Bernard), leads to the rue de la Paroisse, where is the Church of Notre-Dame.

The Church of Notre-Dame was constructed by Mansart; Louis XIV laid the foundation stone on March 10th, 1684. It was the parish church of the Palace, and its registers contain entries, besides those concerning the ordinary inhabitants, of the town, of births and marriages in the royal family whilst at Versailles. Louis XV was confirmed here on August 15th 1772. The façade is heavy (the pediment carries the Arms of France, sculptured by Mazeline and Noel Jouvenet; above the door, Religion and Charity; on each side, Hope and Faith; the large clock dates from 1763). The apsis of the church underwent reconstruction and alterations in 1867.

Cl. P. Gruyer.

Hôtel de Ville.

NAVE : Organ of 1686 and choir sculptured by Caffieri, just as they were in the days of Louis XIV ; the altar is modern (1867): on the pillars of the aisles, 12 marble medallions (Apostles and Fathers of the Church), sculptured from 1657-1687. — RIGHT AISLE, chapel near the Sacristy : St. Vincent of Paul, by Restout (1739). — The Rotunda CHOIR, with its chapels was constructed 1867: the Ascension, painted by Michel Cornaille, which ornamented the altar under Louis XIV. — LEFT AISLE, 1st chapel : Memorial containing the heart of Hoche; bust of Mansart and commemorative tablet; tablet of black marble to the memory of La Quintinie, the creator of the Potager du Roi (King's Market-Garden); cenotaph (1788-1818) of the count de Vergennes, minister of Louis XVI.

The rue de la Paroisse, to the left (on leaving the church) would lead us to the rue Duplessis (market on the same spot as in the time of Louis XIII) and the rue Duplessis to the left, direct to the station Rive Droite.

[The rue de la Paroisse, to the right (on leaving the church of Notre-Dame), takes one to the rue des Réservoirs (on the left, theatre, founded in 1777, by la Montansier; hôtel des Réservoirs, former mansion of Mme de Pompadour, constructed in 1752 and which has preserved its interior salons of the period) and to the Boulevard du Roi (on the right) planted in 1775 (at its end, not particularly elegant steeple of the church of Saint-Antoine-de-Padoue, modern).]

At the beginning of the Boulevard du Roi, the long Boulevard de la Reine was planted at the same time (2 k., 1 ½ miles, long); it occupies, as well as the whole quarter round about, what was the Etang de Clagny, a large pool, which was only drained in the XVIII century, and which provided much of the water for the Park. It leads, on the left, to the hotel Trianon Palace and the Trianons.

Following the Boulevard de la Reine towards the right, we find at No. 38, overlooking the gardens, the pretty facade of the Hôtel de Nyert, the valet de chambre of Louis XV, to-day Hotel Lambinet; in 1870-71, during the siege of Paris, von Moltke here installed the head-quarters of his army. Beyond, we reach the rue Duplessis (at the angle of this street, pretty modern Post Office, Savings Bank office, in Louis XIV style), which leads, to the left, to the station Rive Droite.

If we continued to follow the Boulevard de la Reine we should pass before the Hospice Civil (on the right) founded by Louis XIV, enlarged under Louis XV and Louis XVI, completed in the XIX century (chapel with round dome, preceded by a portico, finished in 1833). After that is the rue de Provence (1st on the right), at No. 20 of which is the house where Bismarck stayed from October 5th 1870 to March 6th 1871 (not open to visitors). There were signed the armistice of January 26th 1871 and the capitulation of Paris, January 28th and the peace preliminaries, February 26th.]

Following the rue Duplessis beyond the Rive Droite railway station we find a square with a statue of Jean Houdon (born at Versailles; 1741-1828), by Tony Noel (1891).

Le mieux informé, le plus complet et le plus intéressant de tous les grands journaux quotidiens

L'ACTUALITÉ

L'Éclair publie chaque matin une chronique très vivante et tres documentée sur LE FAIT DU JOUR

LA POLITIQUE

L'Éclair apprécie les événements politiques avec une indépendance absolue, s'inspirant uniquement des intérêts supérieurs du pays et du désir de réaliser l'entente nationale. Son seul programme est la devise qu'il a choisie : LA FRANCE AVANT TOUT

L'ARMÉE

L'Éclair défend l'Armée, instrument indispensable de la sécurité, de la dignité et de la grandeur nationales, contre ceux qui chercheraient à la désorganiser et à la détruire. Il suit avec intérêt et traite avec une attention spéciale LES QUESTIONS MILITAIRES

INFORMATIONS

L'Éclair est essentiellement un journal d'informations; aussi, par la sûreté et la rapidité de ses renseignements, et par le choix qu'il a apporté dans le recrutement de sa rédaction et de son reportage, justifie-t-il sa réputation d'être le journal LE MIEUX INFORMÉ DE PARIS

COLONIES

L'Éclair, par ses nouvelles coloniales, par ses études sérieuses sur nos possessions, est devenu justement populaire dans LE MONDE COLONIAL

ROMANS

La Vie Parisienne

Journal illustré

Mœurs élégantes
Choses du jour
Théâtres et musique
Critique de la mode
Voyages et sports

29, rue Tronchet, Paris

La Vie Parisienne n'a pas de similaire parmi les journaux illustrés français. Par son indépendance, son dilettantisme, la légèreté d'allures de ses articles et l'originalité de ses dessins, par le ton libre qu'elle prend pour juger hommes et choses, elle est l'expression élégante de l'esprit et du goût parisien le plus fin, dont elle a toujours su conserver la formule.

Tous ceux qui se sont fait un nom dans la littérature ou au théâtre ont débuté ou collaboré à la Vie Parisienne. Citons : Meilhac, Halévy, Taine, Droz, marquis de Massa, About, Nisard, duc de Morny, Frédéric Masson, Gyp, Henri Lavedan, Paul Bourget, Maurice Donnay.

Actuellement, La Vie Parisienne compte parmi ses collaborateurs : Pierre Veber, Colette Willy, Pierre Wolff, Marcel Prévost, Abel Hermant, Tristan Bernard, etc.

SÈVES LARY

Mesdames

Que faut-il pour votre beauté ?

Un fard ?

Une crème de beauté ?

Non

IL FAUT une substance qui fortifie l'action de la nature sur votre merveilleux épiderme.

Les "Sèves LARY"

sèves vivantes extraites des plantes, pénètrent la peau, la vivifient, lui donnent la fraîcheur, le velouté des fleurs.

Les "Sèves LARY"

font disparaître les rides, meurtrissures, rougeurs, démangeaisons, crevasses, taches qui déparent les peaux les plus délicates; elles préservent du hâle.

Les "Sèves LARY"

s'emploient matin et soir.

CAUTERETS

THERMES DE CAUTERETS

et de la Vallée de Saint-Savin

Grand Prix aux Expositions Internationales de Bordeaux, Rome, Madrid, Toulouse et Londres

Station thermale sans rivale, la plus riche en sources sulfureuses.

Six buvettes renommées : 38° c. à 58° c. aux Griffons.

Dix établissements de premier ordre pour bains, douches, massages, pulvérisations à pression naturelle.

Piscines à eaux minérales courantes, uniques en Europe.

Casino, théâtre, concerts de jour sur les promenades.

Théâtre de la Nature. — Sports d'hiver.

Saison du 1er mai au 1er novembre.

Exportation : La Raillère, César, Mauhourat.

Spécialité d'action : Maladies des voies respiratoires, du nez et des oreilles, gastrite, gastralgie, rhumatisme, lymphatisme, neurasthénie, etc.

La station thermale de Cauterets doit sa grande et ancienne réputation à l'efficacité de ses eaux en boissons et en gargarismes, à leur action tonique et reconstituante.

Cauterets, jolie ville ensoleillée, avec ses beaux hôtels, ses dix établissements thermaux, son casino, son théâtre et ses superbes promenades, est située au fond d'une gorge étroite à 10 kil. de Pierrefitte. La route qui y conduit est des plus pittoresques; on la parcourt dans un tramway électrique élégant et commode, qui ne laisse en perdre aucune des beautés, et dont le trajet se fait en 45 minutes.

Aux améliorations réalisées pendant les années précédentes; au tramway électrique de Cauterets à la Raillère, inauguré en 1897, à la restauration du Casino, en 1898, se sont ajoutés l'embellissement de l'Esplanade des Œufs, déjà pourvue d'uu promenoir couvert en 1897, la création du boulevard des Néothermes, l'agrandissement de l'établissement du Bois, l'aménagement de la buvette de Mauhourat dans un pavillon confortable et spacieux, etc.

Pour tous renseignements, s'adresser au directeur de l'Exploitation, à Cauterets, Thermes des Œufs.

ÉTABLISSEMENT THERMAL

Anciens thermes romains de Carthage

Eaux chlorurées sodiques fortes et sulfatées-calciques, hyperthermales et radio-actives employées en bains, douches, étuves et boisson.

La station thermale de Korbous, située sur le golfe de Tunis, à 48 kilomètres de cette ville (gare de Soliman) est ouverte du 1er novembre au 31 mai. Elle constitue, avec son établissement hydrothérapique moderne, ses hôtels, ses villas de style arabe, sa corniche de 8 kilomètres surplombant la mer, son climat extrêmement tempéré et son personnel de spécialistes, une station de premier ordre et sans analogue.

Ses sept sources (de 20 à 60° centigrades), dont plusieurs sont purgatives, ont un débit de près de 5 000 mètres cubes par 24 heures.

Les traitements de Korbous, souverains dans toutes les affections rhumatismales et goutteuses, combattent victorieusement l'anémie, le lymphatisme, la scrofule, les affections gynécologiques chroniques et douloureuses; guérissent les plaies et ulcères variqueux et donnent des résultats immédiats dans toutes les affections provenant d'un séjour prolongé dans les pays chauds, accompagnées d'une congestion des organes abdominaux (foie, rate, etc.), ainsi que dans l'atonie intestinale, les colites et les traumatismes anciens ou récents.
